Seven States counted 75 dead yesterday in the calm, subzero aftermath of a winter-end blizzard as Washington temperatures fell rapidly toward a forecast low of 15 degrees this morning.

Cold blasts from the northwest that reached a velocity of 41 miles an hour yesterday morning forced the mercury down to 25 degrees here at 9:30 a. m. Clear skies and a warm sun brought a six-degree rise by 1:50 p. m. when a steady drop set in once more.

The winds made plane landings impossible at the Hoover Airport and for the first time emergency use was made of the Gravelly Point field all day. No flights were canceled, however.

The torrents of frigid air that gushed into Washington and the rest of the East yesterday, four days ahead of spring, sent skirts flying, hats hurtling and pedestrians running along the Capital's streets.

22 Below in Midwest

The wintry revival was scheduled to be shortlived, however. Clear weather will continue today and tomorrow and the Weather Bureau predicted that rising temperatures tomorrow would put heavy overcoats back into Washington closets by Thursday.

The mercury is expected to remain below freezing all day, and return to the 'teens tonight.

The District Fire Department bore the brunt of inconvenience here yesterday as members answered calls to numerous chimney fires, caused by overstoked furnaces, stoves and fireplaces.

All in all the chill was cheery and invigorating in the Eastern part of the country. Not so, however, in the Middle West.

Biting cold as low as 22 degrees below zero handicapped rescue workers as they bucked concrete-hard drifts in snowplows to bring help to those isolated by the week-end's storm.

Fathers Give Their Lives

How many lay frozen in the battered countryside was only a guess. The death list of 65 in North Dakota and Minnesota alone was swollen by the names of ten other persons who perished in five other States raked by the wide sweep of the storm.

While authorities had yet to make official reports, they said the dead for the most part were frozen and in other instances the sheer force of the wind, mixing snow and dirt into an unbreathable mass, suffocated its victims.

Stories were almost legion of men dying to save their families as the Arctic air mass whipped across the prairie wheatlands as fast as 85 miles an hour. Typical was that of

Freedom That Produces Art Shall Go On, Roosevelt Tells 7,962 at Gallery Opening

Dedication Draws Crowd 2,000 More Than Was Expected

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt stood amidst the splendor of seven centuries of Old World masterpieces last night and asserted America's intention that the "freedom of human spirit" that produced them "shall not be utterly destroyed."

The occasion was the President's dedication of the National Gallery of Art, his formal acceptance for the Nation of the princely collections of Andrew Mellon and Samuel H. Kress and the magnificent temple in which they are housed.

Mr. Roosevelt likened the ceremony to another occasion 78 years ago when, in the third year of the Civil War, men and women gathered in Washington to see the dome of the Capitol completed and the bronze Goddess of Freedom set on its top. Some citizens, he recalled, criticized the money spent on the marble pillars and bronze doors.

"But President Lincoln," said Mr. Roosevelt, "when he heard the criticisms, answered: 'If people see the Capitol going on, it is a sign we intend the Union shall go on.'"

A cosmopolitan throng of 7,962 that jammed the great gallery court, anticipating the President's analogy, broke into applause.

President Roosevelt said that America today could borrow from Lincoln's words and promise not only that the Union shall go on, but that the human spirit which created it shall go on.

The Chief Executive wore a green carnation in the lapel of his dinner jacket as he arrived with his gold-braided military and naval aides. The flower was at once a token of St. Patrick's Day and his wedding anniversary. Mrs. Roosevelt was on the platform with him, wearing a silver evening jacket to hide it.

Knudsen Asks More Arms Labor

Industrial, Union Chiefs Here Act On Plea to Increase Workers by 60%

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

Management and labor in the Nation's key defense industries last night accepted the challenge of William S. Knudsen, United States arms production chief, for a 60 per cent increase in the country's skilled manpower.

Warned by Knudsen and other Federal officials that the Nation faces a serious shortage of labor skills needed to produce a $7,000,000,000 arsenal for Axis foes, a "findings committee" of representatives of labor and industry tackled at once the problem of training workers in plants already making armaments.

The committee was named by a conference of 75 of the country's leading industrialists and labor union executives summoned to Washington yesterday by the Office of Production Management.

The committee will report back with a program after the conference, at a second session today, hears from Undersecretary of War Patterson.

Headed by Golden

Clinton Golden, regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O., is the committee chairman. Its other members are Marion Hedges, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, A. F. of L.; Randall Irwin, industrials relations board of Lockheed Aircraft, and Maj. Albert Sobey, director of the General Motors Institute.

The committee's problem, officials explained, is first to institute techniques which flourished during the '20s but were abandoned in depression years, of "up-grading" unskilled workers through the various skills as rapidly as they can be trained on the job.

Secondly, the committee must consider techniques to be employed for training supervisory employes.

The toughest problem to be solved, officials admitted, is how to key the entire in-plant training program to production schedules without slowing the present pace of the defense program.

Wants Record Output

The question of financing a training program also must be solved. Two methods were suggested at the conference: The first was to pay the cost of training by Government subsidy. The second was to cover the expense and also to promote the program by requiring that provision for it be written into all defense contracts.

Government officials at the conference which was limited to representatives of labor and management in the vital metal trades industries, were, in addition to Knudsen, Sidney Hillman, co-chief of defense production; Secretary of Labor Perkins, and A. F. Hinrichs, acting commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics.

Knudsen reminded the conference that he has estimated at 18,000,000,000 the number of man hours at work at "the moment." Then he added: "The increase which will follow . . . will be more than 60 per cent on top of that."

"Our need for machinery, our need for ships, our need for proper

Deb Blushes and Luncheon Ends in Shrieks—It's Measles

'You've Got Them, Too!' And Guests Depart Without Their Dessert

Breaking out with the measles just before the dessert, a prominent young hostess of yesterday may find that she has given her guests something more than the luncheon they bargained for when they accepted her invitation.

The hostess, Miss Sybella Clayton, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Clayton, was entertaining young friends at the Shoreham. As the meal neared a close, she remarked she was sorry that another young friend had come down with measles only last week.

At that point the guests, who had been noticing (but politely refraining from mentioning) the sudden blotching of Miss Clayton's complexion, pushed back their chairs and shrieked, "You've got them too!" The hostess was rushed home and the guests dispersed, without dessert.

Guests included Miss Louise McNutt, daughter of Federal Security Administrator and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt; Miss Patricia Grady, daughter of the head of the President Lines and Mrs. Henry F. Grady; Miss Ann Moore, daughter of the manager of the Shoreham Hotel; Miss Marion Norris, debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris; Miss Florence Fisher,

Attributed to British

The United States Government was informed yesterday that a long-range Nazi submarine has been ordered to American waters, presumably to raid Britain-bound shipping, it was learned here last night.

The tip came from reliable quarters. The State and Navy Departments, however, refused to comment on the report, and it was emphatically denied by a German Embassy attache.

The U-boat must not only cross 3,000 miles of water, but also slip through the British blockade and the American neutrality patrol. Nevertheless, during the World War German undersea raiders successfully made the perilous voyage, and a pack of four sent 60 ships to the bottom, while a lone U-boat torpedoed five vessels within sight of the New England coast.

Hitler's Speech Recalled

The report of the submarine's mission comes within a few days after President Roosevelt's avowal that the United States will strain to the utmost to send ships, planes and munitions to Britain, followed by Hitler's declaration that American aid would be ineffectual.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, leading foe of the recently passed lend-lease program, charged last night that the submarine tip had originated with Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, and was an attempt to "frighten the State Department."

"It looks like another of the many long strides the Administration is taking toward war," Wheeler declared.

Feasible, Says London

In London, naval circles disclaimed knowledge of the report, but professed to see no reason to doubt the feasibility of such a plan. Unofficial sources here said the tip was based on an intercepted message sent to at least one submarine, presumably capable of operating over a wide area and for a considerable period.

The submarine report gave a new twist to speculation on the fate of the Brazilian freighter Mahukona, which vanished Saturday with her crew of 26 after issuing an S O S 600 miles east of Jacksonville, Fla.

Yesterday the Coast Guard cutter Bibb radioed Washington headquarters that it had discovered wreckage near Bermuda which might indicate that the 2,512-ton vessel had been destroyed. The freighter, a former American ship, left Norfolk, Va., last Monday with a cargo of coal for Rio de Janeiro.

The possibility existed that the cargo ship had been sunk by a

Dr. Woodward Denies Trying To Curb GHA

Former Director Of AMA Law Bureau Testifies All Day

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

Occupying the witness stand all day yesterday, Dr. William C. Woodward gave testimony in the doctors' trial which the Government holds to be incriminating and the defense considers, with equal confidence, to be exonerating.

Defending himself personally, as well as the codefendant American Medical Association, the retired director of the A. M. A.'s bureau of legal medicine and legislation, held fast to his story that, save for advising the District Medical Society to engage legal counsel in its fight on Group Health Association, he took no part in the controversy.

The 73-year-old doctor, one-time District health officer, and coroner, explained further, under direct examination by William E. Leahy, defense counsel, that the A. M. A. itself did nothing more than print an informational article in its Journal, call the attention of affiliated societies to the situation and seek facts on G. H. A. from certain members of Congress.

Dr. R. G. Leland, director of the medical association's bureau of medical economics and himself a defendant, is expected to take the

Schulte Sees Downtown Parking Ban

Representative Schulte (Democrat), Indiana, yesterday predicted that his subcommittee on traffic will bring about the abolition of all downtown parking in Washington.

At the same time he flatly refused to grant Harry Wender, vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, a hearing on the subcommittee's rejection of a bill authorizing the Commissioners to set up more parking meters.

Wender insisted that a public hearing had not been held on the measure by the Schulte subcommittee, although it had been indorsed by civic and trade organizations.

Schulte argued that he didn't want Washington streets to get "cluttered up" with parking meters as he proposed to abolish parking in the congested areas.

"We want to make Washington a metropolitan city," he said, "and get away from the horse and buggy days."

Representative Russell (Democrat), of Texas, a new member of the committee, stated that he favors the continuation of parking meters in the National Capital.

The committee reported favorably two minor bills. One would include reckless driving among the offenses for which motorists are required to obtain liability insurance, while the other authorizes the Federal Government to furnish heat from the central heating plant for the Municipal Center.

U. S. Reported Ready to Send France Wheat

Two Boatloads Expected To Be Dispatched If Britain Agrees

By Bertram D. Hulen.

A consideration is being given to sending two shiploads of wheat to unoccupied France in response to a request of the Vichy government, if suitable controls can be thrown about its distribution.

This was announced yesterday by Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, after Gaston Henry-Haye, the French Ambassador, had conferred with President Roosevelt and expressed confidence that arrangements would be worked out by the United States with Great Britain which would permit food supplies to be sent into the free zone.

Asked about this attitude, Welles said:

"The French Ambassador undoubtedly has reference to a request he has submitted for emergency release of food grains for unoccupied France as cargo for two French ships now in New York. He has been informed that the President was entirely willing that this re-

Cold Plus Opening Of Art Gallery Causes Traffic Jam

The combination of the cold and an unexpectedly large crowd caused much traffic trouble last night after the dedication of the National Gallery of Art.

With the temperature 21 degrees when the crowd started pouring from the gallery about 10:30 p. m., furs were more than an adornment as women fretted while their escorts tried to get taxicabs or while chauffeurs tried to jockey limousines to the door.

Officials had anticipated between 5,000 and 6,000 guests, but the actual count was 7,962. Four hundred taxicabs waiting for the affair to end quickly were grabbed.

Eighty patrolmen and nine officers directed traffic.

Aid Fund Bill Wins Strong G.O.P. Support

Taber Tells Caucus He Favors Measure As It Is Drawn

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Strong Republican support developed last night behind the $7,000,000,000 British aid appropriation as Administration leaders prepared to launch it on a two-day journey through the House.

Representative Taber, of New York, ranking Republican member of the House Appropriations Committee, told a House Republican conference, in effect, that he would support the bill as it stood and would not join an opposition bloc.

G. O. P. critics of the bill declared, nonetheless, they would seek amendments cutting down the appropriation, requiring collateral from Britain and restricting the life of the appropriation.

But the party line on the bill appeared to be definitely broken and no conclusions on policies were reached. Republicans were sharply divided, and Minority Leader Martin indicated he probably would vote for the bill.

Halifax Discounts Losses

Other developments as the House cleared traffic for consideration of the measure today were:

British Ambassador Lord Halifax told newsmen that "Germany will not be able substantially to interfere with the steady flow of American supplies to Great Britain." He said use by Britain of destroyers, long-range flying boats and bombers would keep the losses low.

Representative Woodrum (Democrat), Virginia, whose appropriations committee will report out the $7,000,000,000 bill this morning, outlined full details of the

Yugoslavia, Turkey Map Joint Defense

Report Measures Will Be Taken if Nazis Invade Greece

By Daniel T. Brigham
Copyright by New York Times

Berne, Switzerland, March 17.—Coincidental with the sudden shift of policy by the Yugoslav government, just when things appeared to be blackest for the democracies in general and Greece in particular, comes information to diplomatic quarters here tonight that within the next 48 to 72 hours the general staffs of Yugoslavia and Turkey will have coordinated measures to be taken in the event of German entry into Greece.

The best guess here tonight is that these measures call for the armies of both Yugoslavia and Turkey to defend their respective "zones of security"—in the case of Yugoslavia the Struma and Vardar Valley approaches to the Salonika Peninsula and for Turkey the approaches to the rolling lowlands of the plains of Thrace.

Field Marshal Fevzi Cakmak, chief of the Turkish general staff, according to this information, is en route to an unspecified destination to meet Gen. Peter Pesitch, the Yugoslav minister of war, who by virtue of his cabinet post becomes dictator with absolute power over his country's administration in the event he declares a state of national emergency and decrees general mobilization.

Meantime, the Yugoslav Third and Fifth Army Corps based at Nish and

Hose Run With the Wind For Third Time in Month

Washington's month-old mystery of the breeze-blitzed hosiery deepened yesterday as a 40-mile wind brought the third epidemic of wholesale stocking runs in the downtown area.

The stocking plague, which baffled scientists at the Bureau of Standards and District testing laboratories after previous appearances on February 18 and March 4, occurred again in the same sector—bounded by Tenth, Fourteenth and F Streets and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest.

The toll was not as heavy as in previous blitzes, victims averaging only three runs per limb and no all-out stocking devastation being reported. But the scope was none the less general, virtually all Government offices and business concerns in the breeze-raided area reporting damage.

Sleuthing revealed that the microscopic black specks found in the ruined hose "showed evidence of sulphates and carbonation," leading Bureau of Standards scientists to repeat their theory that the hose raids were caused by strongly acid soot blown by stiff winds in the affected area.

Traffic Policeman Donald Ney's theory that the runs are caused by coal dust stirred up by men delivering the fuel to buildings in the vicinity was strengthened by yesterday's run epidemic.

It was learned that a delivery was made to the Washington Hotel and unloaded in an alley in the block west of the danger area.

A six-year program of public works which would constitute a shelf or reservoir of construction projects for use in time of need was outlined by the National Resources Planning Board in a report transmitted to Congress yesterday by President Roosevelt as a means of maintaining "a strong and healthy national economy" and preparing for "post emergency adjustments."

The board recommended establishment of a revolving fund to be administered by the President for the immediate inauguration of surveys, investigations, and preparation of engineering plans and specifications for selected projects through allocation of aids to Federal and nonfederal agencies and reimbursed to the revolving fund as part of the cost of construction of the project.

In his message transmitting the report President Roosevelt said that "national defense is more than a mobilization of a nation's armed strength."

Hoffman Urges Troops Keep Plants Open

By the Associated Press

A proposal was advanced in Congress yesterday to use troops to insure operation of strike-bound defense plants whenever it was determined that a majority of the employes opposed a work stoppage.

Representative Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, introduced legislation providing that whenever a strike occurs affecting production, fabrication or transportation of any defense material, the Justice Department shall, within 48 hours, hold an election at the strike scene, posing this question:

"Shall we return to work, leaving pending disputes to further negotiations?"

If a majority voted "yes," the Army commander having supervision over the district would be charged with seeing that those who wished to return to work could do so.

Anyone interfering could be imprisoned for as much as one year or fined $1,000.

Meantime, definite word came from high officials that a Federal mediation board to deal with labor disputes in defense industries would be appointed soon.

After an hour's conference at the White House, Secretary of Labor Perkins and Sidney Hillman, associate director of the Office of Production Management, told reporters that the new agency would be created today or Wednesday.

They added that it would be strictly a mediation tribunal.

It is understood that it will be an 11-member board having four representatives from labor, four from industry and three from the general public.

Miss Perkins and Hillman said they had not discussed possible personnel with the President. Speculation about the possible chairman of the board has centered on the names of Wendell Willkie, 1940 Republican Presidential nominee, and Bernard Baruch, New York financier.

On the labor front itself, developments included an announcement by the C. I. O. Steel Workers Organizing Committee that several hundred men had quit work at Bethlehem Steel Company's Cambria Works, Johnstown, Pa., in protest against an employes' election.

James Gent, C. I. O. regional director, said the election was being held by the employes, representation plan which, he asserted, had been declared illegal by the Labor Board. The employes' representation plan appealed the board's decision.

The Cambria Works employ about 15,000 and have defense orders.

Officials of the Office of Production Management here said they expected early settlement of the strike which has tied up construction at Wright Field, Army aviation center near Dayton, Ohio. They did not elaborate. A. F. L. building trades workers struck there because of employment of some C. I. O. workmen.

At New York joint labor-management negotiators for the Nation's soft-coal industry dug through industrial statistics in quest of a common ground on which to debate demands of approximately 450,000 miners for a $1-a-day wage increase.

A subcommittee representing the country's major bituminous operators and the United Mine Workers of America (C. I. O.) announced that it had reached no decision of any kind and probably would have to continue preliminary discussions for at least two more days before attempting to compose differences on wage proposals.

At Boston a shipbuilding workers' union announced that it had notified Federal officials that failure of negotiations with officials of the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s East Boston shipyard had caused the union to authorize its executive board "to take any action it may deem necessary to bring about a successful conclusion." The union is the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, C. I. O.

Military Men Favor New Atlantic Airline

Three Army and Navy officers testified yesterday at the closing hearings of a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on the proposal to grant $1,229,736 to help establish a new transatlantic airmail route.

It was reported that the officers, who spoke in executive session, held that to set up a new line would further national defense by training more pilots in transoceanic flying.

The projected subsidy, which the House has refused to grant despite a Presidential recommendation in the buget, would go to American Export Airlines Co., which is seeking to challenge the present monopoly in American transatlantic aviation now held by Pan American Airways.

The subcommittee is expected to decide the question this week.

Meanwhile, Civil Aeronautics Board hearings opened yesterday on an inquiry into the rates paid Pan American Airways for transportation of mail on its Latin American routes.

Samuel E. Gates, CAB counsel, maintained that the rates "are excessive and are neither fair nor reasonable."

H. J. Friendly, Pan American attorney, said the rate of return on the entire system in 1940 was slightly over 4 per cent and that stockholders have received only about 2½ per cent in dividends.

An extensive enlargement of Pan American service to Latin America July 1 was outlined by Col. J. Clawson Roop, vice president of the line. He said there will be seven trips weekly from Miami to Rio de Janeiro.

Mrs. Mildred Law Named Director Of WPA Welfare

Appointment of Mrs. Mildred T. Law of St. Paul, Minn., as director of the Welfare Program of the Works Project Administration, was announced yesterday by Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant commissioner in charge of community service programs. The appointment becomes effective at once.

MRS. LAW

Mrs. Law succeeds Miss Margaret Stephenson, who has resigned because of ill health.

Since January, 1939, Mrs. Law has been serving as chief regional supervisor for community service programs. Her region embraced Minnesota, the Dakotas, Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas and Nebraska. Her headquarters were first in Chicago; later the office was moved to St. Paul.

Mrs. Law has been with the WPA since 1935, having been named at that time to supervise the Minnesota State household arts program under which unemployed women are trained to become self-supporting through housework. In September, 1936, she was appointed Minnesota State director of the professional and service division and served in this position until her promotion to chief regional supervisor in 1939.

Fritz Thyssen Reported Held In German Camp

Vichy, March 17.—Fritz Thyssen, the German industrialist and munitions king who is considered to have done more than any other individual to boost Adolf Hitler to power, has been interned in the Nazi concentration camp at Dachau, informed sources said today.

Thyssen, who fled Germany in November, 1939, after he broke with Hitler over the Soviet Russian-German pact, was arrested by French police at Cannes, informants said, and was turned over to German authorities by the Vichy government under terms of the French-German armistice.

The arrest was reported made last December at the Riviera resort where Thyssen had been living since the collapse of French resistance.

outlay to a closed meeting of the House Democratic Steering Committee.

Friends of Wendell L. Willkie disclosed that the 1940 Republican Presidential nominee may stage a speech-making campaign of his own in defense of the Administration's foreign policy in answer to any opposition campaign launched by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana.

Woodrum's appearance before the Steering Committee with confidenappropriation accompanied a move to tighten leadership lines against hampering amendments.

The Appropriations Committee presented an almost solid bipartisan front for the bill, with Taber, consistent critic of all former Administration spending bills, fighting shoulder-to-shoulder with Woodrum for the outlay.

For nearly two hours, Tabor held the Republican conference floor, answering critics and defending his position for the bill.

"I don't see anything for the United States to do except to produce sufficient airplanes, tanks, guns and ammunition of all types so democracies can successfully combat Hitler in any event," Taber later told reporters.

"The Major Objective"

"Whether some other country uses these articles to fight with is minor compared with the major objective that we have enough on hand to do the job. I think it is the best insurance we can have against the participation of our own armed forces in the melee."

With Taber declining to take part in any amendment move it was indicated that Representative Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, may sponsor the opposition motion to recommit the bill. The motion may be based on an amendment requiring the President to obtain as much security as he can for any arms loans to Britain.

Tabed took the position that the President "will do that anyway." His reply was the same to a proposed amendment requiring the full $7,000,000,000 to be spent in this country.

Likewise, the New York Republican opposed efforts to reduce the appropriation.

"I do not believe we could cut down the amount and do our part toward supplying the things needed to combat Hitler," Taber told Republican colleagues.

A fourth modifying effort seeks to limit the life of the appropriation to two years. Taber opposed this, because "it would not change the operation of the program by one dollar."

"With available productive facilities in sight," he said, "most of the $7,000,000,000 is going to be spent in 15 months and all of it in 18 months."

Woodrum, meanwhile, was similarly explaining to the Democratic steering committee that the bulk of the appropriation would be spent within the 1942 fiscal year and that virtually all of it would be spent in this country.

Speaker Rayburn joined Woodrum in steering group discussion. Members were told that the $7,000,000,000 represented a lower figure than the amount originally planned, that the British had paid cash for everything purchased to date and are liquidating their holdings here as rapidly as possible, and that part of the appropriation would be used to take over British contracts. Members withheld information on confidential data discussed.

Following the Republican conference, Minority Leader Martin, who, like Taber, opposed the original lend-lease bill, was asked if he would vote for the bill.

"Quite a Little Opposition"

"From present indications, I will be for it," said Martin. "There will probably be amendments."

Martin said there was "quite a little opposition to the appropriation at the conference, and he thought proponents of the measure were less vocal than those who opposed it.

Today's Appropriations Committee report on the bill will be followed by a full day of House debate, with action on amendments and the bill tomorrow. Leaders were hoping to more than halve the opposition vote of 71 cast against concurrence in the Senate lend-lease bill amendments. Chairman Sabath, of the House Rules Committee, said he thought fewer than 25 to 35 votes will be cast against the bill.

The reported bill will contain a provision omitted from the lend-lease bill, under which the President may turn over to the Army and Navy, should the need arise, any of the articles produced for Britain.

Taber said he regarded the new language as "very important, as in this complicated world situation we can't tell what the needs will be in from 3 to 12 months."

At the State Department, Lord Halifax told reporters only a fractional amount of American supplies now being sent to England are failing to reach their destined ports, and an intensified German submarine campaign will make little difference.

"Hitler's threat that he will stop all American supplies to Great Britain will be proved an empty one," he said.

Suggestions from the Willkie camp that Willkie might speak for the program followed Wheeler's proposal to speak across the country against American involvement and the present foreign policy.

Friends of Willkie said that if Wheeler makes the tour Willkie would like to travel a few days behind the Montana Senator, making speeches in rebuttal in every city stumped by the Montanan.

Order Necessary To Seize Property Of Military Men

District Attorney Edward M. Curran yesterday warned finance companies, installment houses and other creditors that they would be liable to prosecution if they repossessed property from men in military service without a court order.

Every case that comes before him will be thoroughly investigated, Curran said, and handled on its merits. Curran said there would be no prosecution as a result of the charge of a Quantico Marine sergeant that his automobile was unlawfully seized.

Curran said an amicable settlement of this was reached after a hearing in his office, when he questioned officials of a Washington bank, finance firm officials and the complaining Marine and his wife.

The Marine agreed to sale of the repossessed automobile at a fair and reasonable price, estimated at more than $700. The finance company will not charge him commission for the sale, storage fees or other repossession costs.

Catalog to List All 2d-Hand Tools for Sale

A move to increase the efficiency of its system for policing second-hand machine tool prices and to widen a major defense-program bottleneck was announced last night by the Defense Commission.

Leon Henderson, price stabilization commissioner, made public changes in the method by which tool dealers report sales, purchases and inventories, which will result in compilation of a complete catalog of all used machine tools for sale anywhere in the United States.

A second advantage of the change, Henderson pointed out, will be to give the production division the information it needs to help defense contractors find where they can buy tools.

The catalog will be open for inspection by contractors in the machine tool section of the division in the Office of Production Management, Henderson stated. Manufacturers, he added, will have the help of Government officials in getting in touch with dealers who have tools for sale.

That section of the machine tool price schedule which relates to the filing of reports by dealers has been simplified, Henderson said. Previously, dealers were required to render complete weekly inventory and monthly sales reports to the price stabilization division. Hereafter, he explained, the dealer need report each tool in his possession only once—either now, as part of his inventory, or when he buys it. If the tool is sold, the sale must also be reported.

$1,533,000,000 Island Base Bill Is Signed

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday signed into law the $1,533,000,000 fourth supplemental defense appropriation bill, providing funds for a chain of protective naval and air bases at island sites in the Atlantic and Pacific.

Bases will be developed at Samoa and Guam and on several of the sites acquired from Great Britain. A total of $1,376,464,600 becomes immediately available, divided about equally between the Army and Navy. The remainder is in contract authorization.

Most of the Army's share will go to complete its huge cantonment construction program, the original estimates for which proved too low. The Navy receives funds for starting work on a program of 400 small warships, and to speed up construction of its two-ocean fleet.

Charter Bill to Senate

Meanwhile, the House passed and sent to the Senate legislation empowering the Maritime Commission to negotiate contracts for construction and chartering of merchant ships during the emergency. An amendment adopted limits all fees and bonuses in all such negotiated contracts to 7 per cent of the construction cost.

At the same time, the War Department assigned four brigadier generals to command new replacement centers recently established to train selectees. Another shift will send Brig. Gen. Henry B. Clagett from Selfridge Field, Mich., to an aviation assignment in the Philippines.

Generals Assigned

Brig. Gen. John H. Hester, now in charge of reserve affairs at the War Department, was named commander of the Camp Wheeler (Ga.) replacement center. The other assignments were: Brig. Gen. Oscar W. Griswold, from Fort Benning, Ga., to command the Camp Croft (S. C.) replacement center; Brig. Gen. William H. Simpson, from Fort Sam Houston, Tex., to command the Camp Wolter (Tex.) replacement center, and Brig. Gen. Charles H. White, from Fort Ord, Calif., to command the Camp Roberts (Calif.) replacement center.

The War Department also announced that Maj. Edwin H. Armstrong, inventor and Columbia University professor, had offered the Army free use of his patents on the frequency-modulation system of radio communication during the emergency.

Secretary Stimson made public a letter to Maj. Armstrong thanking him for his offer, terming it a "patriotic example" for the Nation.

Laborite Urges U. S.-British Union To Enforce Peace

London, March 17 (AP).—Union of the United States and Britain after the war to enforce peace aims of the democracies was urged tonight by Labor Leader Josiah C. Wedgwood in a broadcast to America.

"I do not believe it is any more difficult to get than was the union between England and Scotland in 1707," he said. "If I pin my hopes to union with America, it is because union is the strongest bond, leaving no loophole for evasion of duty, or responsibility for sacrifice in the future."

Peace aims embodying the elimination of the Nazi and Fascist governments and measures to prevent their return to power would depend on the United States, Wedgwood asserted, adding: "You pay the piper and you call the tune."

Judge Alfred D. Barksdale, Lynchburg, Va., is now serving in the Washington court.

submarine, or by a Nazi surface raider.

The lone underseas raider not only must penetrate the British blockade in the European Atlantic, but also the Allied western water patrols. Also it would have to avoid the secret American neutrality patrol, extending 600 miles into the sea.

What action the American squadron might take depends on the orders it would receive from the Navy Department here, but at least the Nazi submarine would keep under observation to see that no belligerent acts occurred inside the Pan-American neutrality zone.

Once through the cordon, the submarine might seek to refuel in American ports under terms of international law, or undertake the more difficult task of refueling at sea from a tanker. Presumably it would seek to harass the flow of ships to Canada, where the convoys are formed for the Atlantic voyage.

One observer last night said that a single Nazi U-boat in American water would have more psychological and nuisance value than military effect against the British merchantmen.

On the other hand, it was pointed out that the U-53 broke through the Allied blockade in 1916 and after running into Newport, R. I., and paying respects, sneaked into waters within sight of the New England coast and within a few hours sank five Allied supply ships.

Later, when the United States entered the war, the German Navy managed to get four U-boats across the Atlantic and these were credited with destroying 60 vessels, none of which was a troop transport, main target of the submarine "wolf pack."

First of the German underseas fleet to breech the Allied blockade in the World War was the Deutschland—a commercial submarine—which startled both the British navy and the United States by carrying a cargo of dyestuffs 3,800 miles into Baltimore.

Loaded with nickel and rubber, the underseas carrier then nudged its way back to Bremerhaven, and a few months later made a second American visit to New London, Conn.

In June of 1918 U-boats appeared off New York, torpedoing several vessels. Steel nets were dropped across the narrow harbor entrance and authorities ordered the lights blacked out. The following the U-156 arose to the a Sunday afternoon off Mass., leisurely sunk several barges, and d the crowded beach

Tax Decisions Unreached, Doughton Says

Moving to still a mounting flood of tax rumors, Chairman Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday said that no policy decisions on taxes have yet been reached nor will his committee start considering revisions before April 1.

In a formal statement, Doughton administered a rebuke to those "making suggestions for revenue legislation to the press rather than to the appropriate committee of Congress." He said the practice "is in no way helpful and to be deplored."

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau meanwhile in a press conference said the Treasury has not yet presented any suggestion for new taxes to members of Congress and probably will not do so until after April 1.

Morgenthau said that preliminary studies of March 15 income tax returns indicated an initial yield of $1,000,000,000 and total income tax collections of about $3,000,000,000. He said no definite figures are yet available.

Speculation Continues

Despite Doughton's statement, speculation among members on forthcoming tax revisions continued.

One proposal for new revenue expected to be laid before the Ways and Means Committee would impose an interest charge of about 4 per cent on portions of the Federal income tax paid to the Treasury on the installment plan.

Reports also were published that a general manufacturers excise tax may be urged. Asked about this, Doughton said he expected it to be "one among many others that will be mentioned."

Doughton has consistently battled against the manufacturers excise tax, but he said in response to a question that peculiar problems were presented by the defense emergency and no one should bind himself in advance to a given line of tax action.

Asked if new tax legislation may call for $1,500,000,000 as suggested in some reports, Doughton said he expected "that much or more will be needed, but I don't know how much we will raise."

Lower Exemptions

Other published reports have mentioned possible further increase in the normal rate on middle-bracket incomes and a further lowering of exemptions.

In his formal statement, Doughton pointed out that the House through its Ways and Means Committee is charged with the initiation of tax legislation.

He said his Congressional tax committee, with the advice and assistance of its technical staff, has "been continually alert to discover and correct defects in revenue legislation, whether or not such action was suggested by the appropriate executive agencies.

"Neither the origin nor the purpose of suggested changes in revenue legislation can relieve the Committee on Ways and Means or the Congress of the plain duty of examining such subjects independently."

He stressed the need for "careful deliberation" if new taxes are to be devised to raise the largest amounts possible "without seriously upsetting and disrupting our economy."

Four Roads Leading Here Urged in Report

Washington would become a focal point for one of the Nation's principal highways if the Atlantic Coastal Highway recommended to Congress yesterday by the National Resources Planning Board were built.

Four highway projects touching Washington were listed in the voluminous report submitted to President Roosevelt.

The Atlantic Coastal Highway would extend from Washington to New York and then branch northward into New England and southward into Southeastern and Southwestern States.

Useful for Defense and Peace

"Because of the area to be served," the board stated, "this proposed highway is likely to be the most important ever to be built in this country.

"It is eminently fitted for both peacetime and defense purposes. Properly designed and properly located, it will become the backbone of the highway system of the East Coast. As a facility for efficient mobilization of military forces, and for the rapid movement of troops and munitions, it would be indispensable."

The report also lists new Washington-Baltimore and Washington-Annapolis highways as desirable projects for this area.

Maryland Share $7,000,000

The Washington-Baltimore thoroughfare, the report states, would occupy a 400-foot right-of-way and be built partially on Federal-owned land. The Maryland share of the cost, the board said, would be $7,000,000.

Considerable "recreational traffic" was cited as a reason for a new Washington-Annapolis highway.

The report recommended that the George Washington Memorial Parkway be extended to connect with the Blue Ridge Parkway in the vicinity of Harpers Ferry, W. Va., and suggested that the Mount Vernon Boulevard be extended to George Washington's birthplace at Wakefield, Va.

sources."

Recalling that the budget contained his recommendations for the financial outlays to carry on a public works program during the next fiscal year, Mr. Roosevelt explained that "this report places these recommendations within the framework of a long-range policy of intelligent planning for the future."

Because projects not needed for defense have been temporarily deferred on account of the national emergency, the President added, "We are now in the process of storing up a reservoir of nondefense public works which can be loosed when the pace of rearmament slackens."

Designed for Stabilization

Entitled "Development of Resources and Stabilization of Employment in the United States," the report was regarded as a plan for not only meeting present needs as the national defense program unfolds, but as looking to the future when the war has ended and energies will center on stabilization questions and cushioning the country against the after-effects of the conflict.

In its letter transmitting the report to the President the board made a number of recommendations in addition to the revolving fund. Eight points were put forward, as follows:

In order to provide a "shelf" or "reservoir" of public construction projects of tested value:

1. Continued and invigorated efforts to secure the preparation of six-year programs or capital budgets by Federal agencies, State governments, local governments and other agencies, public and private, anticipating a large volume of construction activity.

Alternative Lists

2. Development of alternative lists of projects included in six-year programs according to size of the project, types and locations of skilled and unskilled labor involved, materials needed, rapidity of beginning, and flexibility of termination—all in relation to employment stabilization.

3. Immediate inauguration of surveys, investigations, and preparation of engineering plans and specifications for selected projects through allocation of aids to Federal and non-Federal agencies from a revolving fund to be administered by the President through his executive office; and reimbursed to the revolving fund as part of the cost of construction of the project."

To permit rapid inauguration of work on projects in times of need:

4. Advance authorization by the Congress of procedures for grants, loans, guaranties of loans, leasing arrangements, or other devices for aids to State and local governments for non-Federal projects for employment stabilization effective upon appropriation of funds by the Congress.

5. Advance authorization by the Congress of construction of Federal projects in the six-year program of "A" priorities. Such authorization should be effective upon appropriation of funds by the Congress, and not in itself involve any commitment for the immediate construction of the project.

6. Appropriation for advance purchase of sites of projects by appropriate Governmental agencies.

7. Development of a method of financing public works projects and studies of related problems of investment, taxation and the Federal, State and local shares of responsibility of costs of various types of public works and related activities.

8. Coordination of public works construction at all levels of government, with other public policies which affect the level of business activity and employment, such as fiscal policy, social security policy and policies of aid to private enterprises.

District Defense Council Plans Survey of Autos for Emergency

A survey of automotive vehicles in Washington which could be used to evacuate residents in case of invasion, sabotage, fire or other emergency will be conducted shortly by the Metropolitan police for the District Defense Council, it was learned yesterday through a questionnaire the council hopes to obtain the location at all times of all vehicles which would be available. Motorists are under no compulsion to answer the questions, it was announced, and all cooperation will be voluntary.

The questionnaire was printed at the direction of the council's subcommittee on civilian protection, of which Maj. Ernest W. Brown is chairman. The blanks will be collected one week after distribution.

Information wanted by the defense council, to be open only to proper governmental authorities, includes the location and capacity of ambulances, buses and trucks of all types.

Owners are also to be asked their addresses and telephone numbers, both home and business, and similar information on two other persons who know of the vehicles location.

All information received will be turned over to Maj. Brown and compiled for immediate use if and when needed. Appointed to work out details of the plan is Claudius W. Turner, chairman of the council's subcommittee on mobilization and chairman of the traffic committee of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

Turner emphasized that any vehicle needed for sudden evacuation would be used only with the owner's consent and in event of an extreme public emergency.

29th Division Puts In Its Bid For Specialists

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Correspondent

Fort George G. Meade, Md., March 17.—Requisitions for the first 925 selectees of 9,000 scheduled to join the Twenty-ninth Division in April were received by the reception center here today.

The 925 men, part of 1,999 ordered for the division before April 10, will be inducted chiefly from Pennsylvania. The additional 1,074 will be inducted in Virginia and Maryland and will come to the division from Camp Lee, Va.

Of the 925 ordered from the Meade reception center, 294 will be specialists, from any State in the Third Corps Area, and 631 will be basic soldiers, all from Pennsylvania. Basic soldiers are men with no profession or trade in civil life which can be adapted to Army requirements; they supply riflemen in the Infantry regiments and cannoneers in the Field Artillery.

The 294 specialists requested by the division include 123 auto mechanics, 7 bandsmen, 3 blasters and powdermen, 13 carpenters, 1 chief clerk, 10 general clerks, 14 cooks, 1 dental technician, 4 truckmasters, 3 electricians, 4 machinists, 12 general mechanics, 4 medical technicians, 3 mess sergeants, 21 radio operators, 5 shipping clerks, 5 riggers, 3 riveters and drillers, 1 sanitary technician, 2 stenographers, 3 surgical technicians, 2 surveyors, 16 telephone linemen and 134 truck drivers.

The requisition specified that the men be furnished "as soon as possible" after April 1. At the reception center, it was indicated the first increments might begin to reach their regiments by April 5.

The reception center, which had 1,540 selectees on hand Sunday night, the greatest number in barracks at one time since the center opened, will send 432 men to stations tomorrow. Of these, 221 will go to Camp Lee, 18 to Fort Belvoir, 2 to Langley Field, 50 (colored) to Edgewood Arsenal, Md., 26 (colored) to Camp Wallace, Tex.; 1 to the Thirteen Hundredth Service Unit at Baltimore, 2 to Jefferson Barracks, Mo.; 1 to Maxwell Field, Ala., and 1 to Fort Meade.

Brig. Gen. William H. Sands, of Norfolk, commanding the Fifty-fourth Field Artillery Brigade, and Brig. Gen. Amos W. W. Woodcock, of Baltimore, commanding the Fifty-eighth Infantry Brigade, have been appointed to a board to meet May 15 to examine reserve officers for the eligible list as reserve brigadier generals. Also on the board are Brig. Gen. John N. Greely, Regular Army, and Lieut. Col. William M. Carter, of Fort Meade, who will act as recorder.

Americans Ready for Any Call, Knox Says

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, March 17.—Declaring the Nation was in "deadly peril," Secretary Knox said tonight that the "free men who comprise the real defense" were ready for any call, even though for some it might mean "cruel wounds or sudden death."

"If the time ever comes when we must once more defend this bright land of ours," he said in an address to the Hibernian Society, "we will not be found wanting . . ."

The Navy Secretary, a Republican, said partisan conflicts must be put aside.

"When the danger comes from without," he said, "when some enemy threatens to destroy the very institutions under which we enjoy the privileges of democracy, then the voice of the party must be hushed, the shrill tones of political conflict must be stilled, the ranks, broken by internal differences," must be closed up.

"Ready for Any Call"

"To pursue partisan purposes and to selfishly calculate upon the effects of political action is to be guilty of adding to the perils which confront the Nation."

Responding to a toast to President Roosevelt, Knox told his listeners every "good American holds himself ready for any call for his services which the Commander in Chief may make."

"It may call for minor sacrifice of income," he said. "It may mean longer hours of labor. It may involve drastic changes in occupation. For some, it may mean the rupture of home ties, the enlistment in the armed forces, the incurring of grave danger, and for some, it may mean cruel wounds or sudden death."

Praising the President's leadership, the Secretary asserted: "The successive measures the President has taken to bolster the cause of democracy in the world have provided at least a reasonable hope that the march of totalitarianism can be halted and its foul champions driven back to the caves of the Dark Ages whence they came."

Conquered Nations Listed

The Secretary also stated that the use of force by labor union or employer in industry vital to National defense "must be rigorously restrained and resort must be had to the processes of conciliation and arbitration."

Enumerating the nations conquered by Germany, he declared the successes of Hitler, "like those of Alexander, Genghis Khan and Napoleon, must spread to the seven seas and the four corners of the world if they are not stopped by those who would die rather than see them continued."

Then Knox asked "what would be the fate of Ireland were Britain to go down?"

"I am afraid the German manacles would be much more difficult to remove than were the bindings of a Cromwell or the lashings of an English aristocracy. And driving the Germans out of Ireland would be a task more difficult than any the good St. Patrick ever tackled."

machinery both for ships and tanks and planes is so great," he continued, "that upon you will rest the responsibility o ftraining more people in the shortest possible time in order that we may meet the deliveries that are so sorely needed both here and abroad."

"I can't make it strong enough. You have heard what the President said. We have to go into production on a scale in America that has never been approached before and we come to you, as the fathers of American production, to help us get it."

Knudsen urged, too, that every manufacturing plant, large or small, which has suitable machinery now idle, be enlisted in the defense program.

In a statement he asked major contractors to sublet every bit of work that they could and invited small manufacturers to apply for defense work through regional offices of the Office of Production Management.

"Nothing short of the practical limit of our available productive capacity is sufficient for the defense job we have now undertaken," he said.

Knudsen introduced his "coworker and codirector," Hillman, by referring to their OPM relationship as that of "a couple of Siamese twins." Knudsen added:

"While I am on my feet I want to say this, that we have been kidded a little bit about this Siamese business, but as long as we are satisfied, it seems to me that you should be."

Observing that "last June there were many people who still thought in terms of unemployment and labor surpluses and had the psychology of 10 years of depression," Hillman declared:

"None of us knows what the program will call for tomorrow . . . Our very best may not be good enough for the requirements of the situation." The he declared:

"But at this time we must give ourselves fully to the task that is right here before us, and that is to make sure that we really produce at a pace that will even exceed the expectation of the best of our friends . . . We owe it to the country to do nothing less than the best that we can give to the program."

Knudsen used the shipbuilding yards as one example of the need for workers. If the number of skilled workmen has to be spread out in order to lay the keels of more ships, he said, the results may not be satisfactory. He urged shipbuilders to "give every skilled man three helpers to learn his work."

Secretary Perkins asked the labor leaders not to fear that skills learned under the defense program will be of little benefit to the worker at the end of the war. She said training received now would help workers find jobs later.

Hinrichs demonstrated with figures and charts how pools of skilled workers in vital industries are rapidly being exhausted.

"We have lost much needed time, but we still have some," Hinrichs declared. "Whether or not the job is done depends on you and you alone."

3 Held in Plot To Deliver Oil To Japanese

By the Associated Press

New York, March 17.—Federal officials announced today three men had been arrested in connection with a reported plan to float false certificates permitting delivery of east Texas crude oil to purchasing commissions of foreign governments.

Assistant United States Attorney Maxwell S. McKnight said the plan had gone so far that Japanese interests, who had come to New York, had negotiated for 5,000,000 barrels of crude oil for $5,750,000.

The oil was intended, it was understood, for the Japanese air force.

No money actually was received by the men arrested, McKnight said, although the Japanese were reported to have spent approximately $134,000 in the negotiations.

Mail Fraud Charge

Januar D. Bove, 44, of New York, a broker, was arrested here and held in $5,000 bail for grand jury action on a charge of using the mails in a scheme to defraud.

Robert H. Light, 40, of Dallas, Tex., was arrested in Dallas on a similar charge and released in $10,000 bond. McKnight announced that Harry Bergman, of Hollywood, had been arrested in San Francisco and held in similar bail. Lightfoot and Bergman were described as presidents of oil companies.

McKnight said the plan involved the floating of 100 false certificates, each calling for delivery of 70,000 barrels of oil. Efforts were made to sell the certificates, he said, to the French Purchasing Commission before France fell; to the British Purchasing Commission, the Spanish government, Italian interests in London before the Italians declared war, and others.

Tanker Chartered

A former Czecho-Slovakian, representing the Japanese, was understood to have spent $20,000 in chartering an oil tanker, which put into the Port of Houston, Tex. The legitimacy of this representative's action or that of the prospective buyers was not questioned.

McNight said that officials of the Nihon Soda Kabushiki Kaisha, of New York, came from Japan to New York to negotiate for oil, gas, steel and cotton and arranged in part with New York banking institutions to set up a $25,000,000 fund, with Japanese government bonds being deposited as collateral.

The initial transaction in this fund, McKnight said, concerned the Texas oil.

Sid Bonaime, a Tilden (Minn.) train agent.

His car was blown into a ditch near Crockston, Minn., trapping him, his wife and their small child as they drove home Saturday night. Bonaime fought to get his car back on the pavement, failed. In desperation, he wrapped his wife an child in blankets and set out on foot in the face of the gale for help.

Hours passed. The storm subsided somewhat. Searchers found his wife and child, still alive, and they were taken to shelter. Of Bonaime, however, there was no trace. Yesterday, some distance from his car, searchers came upon his frozen body, where he had fallen in a struggle against the wind, trying to find someone who could help his family.

On Michigan's upper peninsula, anxiety turned to elation when the Baraga County sheriff's office reported that nearly a score of fishermen, a woman among them, had reached the shore of Lake Superior "safe and sound" after they were swept away on broken ice floes Sunday.

North Dakota suffered the greatest havoc with 38 known dead by last night.

It was there that the feeble wave of a dying brother's arm saved Robert Taylor, 10, of Dazey, N. Dak. A search party found Robert's brothers, Leo, 17, and Donald, 15, both dead. Suddenly, a movement in a snowbank was seen. It was the arm of Robert's twin, Dickie.

The rescuers dug in and found the twins wrapped together, Dickie in the throes of death. Robert was taken to a Valley City (N. Dak.) hospital in serious condition.

The deaths by States included North Dakota, 38; Minnesota, 27; Wisconsin, 3; New York, 2; Ohio, 2; Michigan, 2, and Pennsylvania, 1.

Grocer Held Up, Two Thugs Cut Telephone Wires

Joseph A. Silberg, proprietor of a grocery store at 85 H Street Northwest, was held up and robbed early yesterday by two men who took $140 from the cash register and escaped after first cutting the telephone wires.

In another robbery, Charles R. Daniels, 1816 Upshur Street Northwest, reported to police yesterday that thieves entered his beauty shop at 2812 Alabama Avenue Southeast over the weekend and stole $17 in change from the cash register. Entry was gained by forcing the rear door.

Three colored men yesterday attacked and attempted to rob Max Gamerman, 51, of 3044 Rodman Street Northwest, as he stopped his Certified Bakery truck in front of 1820 First Street Northwest. Gamerman called for help and fought back at the men, who fled.

Mayo Expert Calls Food Key to Defense

The fact that "Our food ways are worse today than they ever were in our history" has a direct bearing on whether the United States will be able to arm herself and the other democracies in time, Dr. Russell M. Wilder, head of the dpartment of medicine of the Mayo Foundation, declared last night.

He addressed more than 100 persons at a meeting of the Monday Evening Club held at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K Streets Northwest.

"The will to sacrifice privileges and the will to work depend greatly on the foods that men eat," he said. "Endurance, determination, courage—these qualities are weakened when particular vitamins are lacking in food.

"It will take time to gear up men to run accelerated machinery. Unless an attack on this front begins immediately we may not be able to move materials fast enough to the battle lines of democracy."

Many of mankind's disabilities can be traced to absence of a single vitamin—thiamin, vitaine B1—which is lacking in finely ground white flour, said Dr. Wilder. The change from a diet of whole wheat, caused by the perfection of milling machinery about 1870, has decreased the quantity of bread's thiamin content by about 90 per cent, he said. He traced similar deficiencies in highly refined white sugar.

"Debtors in the prisons of London 100 years ago got as much thiamin in their diets as does the average person today," he stated.

On the basis of experiments conducted by medical science, he pointed out that "The lack of thiamin in diet may cause a person to change from an ambitious, energetic individual to one who is slovenly and disinterested. The first thing that goes is the will to sacrifice, the will to get anything done."

Loss of thiamin in diet can be compensated "to some extent" by plenty of vegetables, fruits and milk, Dr. Wilder said. Pork chops and the soya bean also contain the vital vitamin, he explained, adding that "none is as good as wheat, however."

There is "considerable reason" to believe that the so-called degenerative diseases — arterial sclerosis, diabetis, arthritis—are related to diet deficiencies, he said.

"The attack on the problem of major significance even apart from the present emergency."

Dr. Wilder, now serving as chairman of the committee on feed and nutrition of the National Research Council, described the efforts now under way to introduce more thyamin into the diet of the American consumer by stimulating the eating of bread with the vitamine content.

He was introduced by Dr. William DeKleine, medical and health director for the American Red Cross.

Lansburgh Officials To Confer With Union

A conference was scheduled for this morning between union officials and representatives of the Lansburgh and Co. department store in an effort to settle the four-day-old strike of 38 maintenance employes.

A series of discussions yesterday between James Kimbro, president of the A. F. of L. Building Service Employes Local 82, and Austin S. Donaldson, manager of the company, led to the settlement of several points in the dispute, Kimbro said.

Aid Allies Group Urges Navy Convoy U. S. Arms 'If Need Be'

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, March 17.—The committee to defend America by aiding the allies today called for the convoy of ships to Great Britain with American naval vessels, "if need be." Adopting the slogan, "Deliver the goods to Britain now," it also urged "immediate and adequate appropriations under the Lend-Lease Act."

The statement was issued following a 2-day conference of 26 members of the organization's national policy board of which Lewis W. Douglas, president of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, is chairman, said that this year was a critical one and might even become a desperate year because of the alarming rate in the sinking of British ships. It listed a five-point program for effective and full material aid to the allies, including:

"Repair of Allied war vessels in American waters; supplying to the Allies of all possible merchant tonnage; transfer to the Allies of additional destroyers and other naval craft; permission to the Allies to organize convoys in American ports; convoy of ships with American naval vessels if need be."

"Our slogan will be 'Deliver the goods to Britain now,'" the statement said.

C.I.O. Head Urges Aid to Bridges

Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., called upon all its unions yesterday to help defend Harry Bridges against deportation to Australia on a charge of having been a Communist. Bridges is head of the C. I. O.'s Longshoremen's Union.

"Organized labor cannot stand idly by and witness the persecution of any of its leaders or members," Murray wrote union officials.

240,000 Nazi Soldiers Face Greek Border

By Robert St. John
Associated Press Staff Writer

Belgrade, March 17.—Germany has moved 16 divisions—perhaps 240,000 fighters—up to or within striking distance of Bulgaria's Greek frontier, a military expert reported tonight, as Bulgaria herself prepared for possible Balkan battles between Nazis and British.

The 16 divisions were part of long columns of Nazi troops which this expert said were continuing to pour toward Greece through Hungary and Rumania to counterbalance the landing of a British expeditionary force in Greece.

Nearly a third of a British force of 300,000 was reported Saturday to have been landed in Greece, with convoys still on the way.

The Bulgarian government ordered all direct contact with German troops in Bulgaria suspended to eliminate possible spying on Nazi military contingents.

The decree applied to any trader, private person, society or organization and was issued in connection with a new plan for feeding the Nazi army through the Bulgarian food ministry out of surpluses which have been accumulating for months to Germany's credit.

Divisions on Soviet Border

Bulgaria, with Rumania, also adopted new rules to reduce nonmilitary traveling to a minimum by suspending the issuance of all visas by consulates except on specific telegraphed instructions from the Bucharest and Sofia foreign offices.

The 16 German divisions, the military expert said, are in addition to the 12 in Rumania, roughly described as in these locations:

Two still actually instructing the Rumanian army or defending strategic points; four on the Russian frontier or moving in that direction; two near Yugoslavia, and four scattered along the supply line ready to be thrown in any direction they may be needed.

This observer said the nature of the military activity indicated that no attack could be expected within the next few days.

The sudden moving down of reinforcements, he declared, was an indication that Germany had been caught unaware last week by the extent of British landings in Greece.

While the contents of Turkish President Ismet Inonu's note to Adolf Hitler still remained undisclosed, Greek sources expressed confidence that Turkey will sooner or later lend support to any British-Greek eort against the Germans.

Greek emissaries are known to be in both Turkey and Yugoslavia attempting to whip up interest in their projected fight against the Nazis.

In the case of Yugoslavia, the best they can hope for at the moment is continued refusal to demobilize or permit passage of Nazi troops and war supplies or the most recent German demand—the right to establish Nazi war hospitals on Yugoslav soil.

They are reconciled to the possibility that Hitler, for face-saving reasons, will this week accept Yugoslavia's offer of a friendship pact.

A dispatch from Salonika told how all English-speaking Greeks were being conscripted for service as "interpreters" to provide liaison with the British.

Britain Expects Invasion Attempt Soon, Says Cowles

Des Moines, Iowa, March 17 (AP).—John Cowles, Minneapolis publisher, who accompanied Wendell Willkie to Britain, today told the Iowa Legislature that an invasion attempt of Great Britain is expected very soon, "and it will be a very bloody battle when it comes."

The British, he said, expect the invasion effort "to come from every direction at once."

Hitler has a large quantity of British army uniforms on hand, he added, and "may try to drop perhaps 100,000 troops dressed in those uniforms" into England. He indicated his belief that "a great many English troops" will fall under the fire of other British regiments in the expected battle of Britain.

The British, he said, expect to attain air equality with the Germans by next fall, assuming that American plane deliveries reach scheduled volume meanwhile, and definite air superiority some time in 1942. "By next year the British expect to be on the offensive everywhere," he said.

Japan Tightens Rationing Law To Eliminate Rice Speculation

Tokyo, March 17 (AP).—Japanese rice rationing will be tightened April 1, the government announced today, as a further effort to eliminate illegal speculations in the food.

Amounts of rice to be allowed will vary, with laborers, for example, getting more than office workers, but the amounts will be much less than the Japanese are accustomed to eating.

Rice now comes mostly from Indo-China—with oats added, which the Japanese do not like.

Saigon, French Indo-China, March 17 (AP).—Authoritative circles said today that Indo-China and Japan had agreed on shipment of 770,000 tons of the colony's rice to Japan in return for large yen credits and cash.

Room Registry Opens; 2,300 Places Listed

The District Defense Housing Registry at 458 Indiana Avenue Northwest yesterday inaugurated its service to new Federal employes seeking living quarters, but the clamor for accommodations was conspicuous by its absence.

"We are really just getting under way," said William Press, secretary of the housing committee, District Defense Council, "and we didn't expect much of a rush at first."

Press met yesterday with Roy Miller, manager of the registry, and following the conference announced that some 2,000 roms and 300 apartments and houses have been listed as available.

"Although there was no rush for homes yesterday," Press declared, "we anticipate increasing demands as the defense program progresses. We purposely have avoided encouraging persons to come to us for accommodations until we are certain there are sufficient quarters available for all."

Residents of Washington and immediate vicinity are urged by the office to list rooms, apartments and houses by calling Republic 1086. A list of minimum standards is available upon request.

Italian Press Calls Roosevelt Ignorant Bully

By Louis P. Lochner
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, March 17.—President Roosevelt occupied the front pages of the German press today, which with one accord set itself to pick to pieces his Saturday night broadcast calling for a total effort to help Britain.

The theme was that he had sounded a "dangerous" note of intervention in the European conflict which would be met with "most vigorous measures."

The Frankfurter Zeitung, however, declared the President regarded the aid law as a personal mandate also to "meddle provocatively" in the Far East.

"Roosevelt is evidently working for a break with Japan . . . Ambition is the motive force behind this program which endangers the entire world," this paper said.

Big headlines in such papers as Propaganda Minister Paul Goebbels' Der Angriff, Nachtausgabe and Boernsen Zeitung read: "Roosevelt Perverted by London—Lies About Democratic Freedom," "Apostle of Liberty Roosevelt—Wall Street Wants to Be Master of the Coming World Order."

(Rome dispatches said Italian newspaper attacks on Mr. Roosevelt also grew in violence. Fascist editorials characterized him in effect as an "ignorant bully" using Barnum showmanship to "dupe" the American people into war.

(A prominent display was given in Rome to accounts of strikes in United States defense industries.)

"In his nervous haste, the President loaded his rapid-fire cannon against the authoritarian states, but with numerous duds and prematurely exploding shells," said Boersen Zeitung.

French Hear Address

Vichy, March 17.—France's special position eliminates the possibility of an official comment upon President Roosevelt's Saturday broadcast of which short summaries are published in the press.

The speech was heard with interest, though, by radio listeners and the terms of the declaration were generally known to the public today.

An editorial in Le Temps tonight gives some approximation of the official reaction if it could be published.

"The speech," it says, "doubtless aims to place the American public squarely before the responsibilities created by the adoption of the lend-lease bill insofar as the application of that act demands the abandonment of all individual interests. The President at the outstart takes an emphatic stand against strikes, disorders and sabotage and all efforts of private interests to interfere with the smooth operation of the program the Administration has laid down.

"Mr. Roosevelt has given the American people the feeling that a new chapter has begun."

Doctors to State Objections Today to Drafting of Internes

Six of the Nation's leading medical authorities will join with representatives of more than 3,000 medical students and internes today to protest induction of prospective physicians into "buck-private" duties before they can complete their studies and serve the country's armed forces in professional capacities.

They will testify at 10:30 a. m. before the Senate Military Affairs Committee hearing on the Murray bill.

A representative of the Association of Medical Students and the Interne Council of America yesterday termed as "chaotic" the present undetermined status of medical students and internes with local Selective Service boards throughout the country.

The Army needs approximately 8,000 physicians a year under present plans, it was said.

Speakers at today's hearing will include Dr. Claude W. Munger, of the American Hospital Association; Msgr. Maurice Griffin, of the Catholic Hospital Association; Dr. Hugh Cabot, of Boston; Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association; Dr. Hugh Young, Dr. Percival Rossiter, former surgeon general of the Navy; Thomas L. Perry, jr., president of the Association of Medical Students; Dr. Richard W. Lippman, chairman of the Committee on Health Defense of the Interne Council of America and the Association of Medical Students; Wayne Barker, vice president of the Association of Medical Students, and Dr. C. Willard Camalier, past president of the American Dental Association.

Tank Makers Glory in Feats Of Nile Army

By Ernest Agnew
Associated Press Staff Writer

A Tank Factory Somewhere in England, March 17.—Men and women who build British tanks here glowed with praise at the lunch hour today from men who rode those armored gasoline steeds into the Battle of North Africa.

The workers had come off the assembly line which turns out masses of the kind of tanks which helped Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell's army of the Nile to drive the Italians out of Egypt and far back into Libya.

Two tank officers, back in England, were telling of the British dash to Bengasi.

"Even the heaviest guns couldn't stop these tanks," said a captain.

The other officer, a major, related how an Australian tank corps held off a superior Italian force all day until reinforcements arrived at Bengasi, even though its ammunition ran so low at one time that an army truck had to run through fire to replenish it.

Both told the workers their tanks stood the test of sandstorms and long desert drives without so much as a sputter.

Newspapermen, after touring the roaring plant—on what was a cow pasture 11 months ago—saw these well-armored, well-armed land cruisers maneuvered around a test ground. They handled so well a demonstrator turned one completely around in its own length.

A foreman explained that many of the 6,200 parts that go into them have to be exact to within one one-thousandth of an inch.

Men, women and boys in the plant work seven days a week.

A pretty, 22-year-old blonde blew a wisp of hair from her grease-covered nose and said she had started to operate a lathe the day war broke out.

Greek King Praises Army For Smashing Duce's Drive

By the Associated Press

Athens, March 17.—King George II of Greece tonight sent his personal thanks to the Greek army for what he termed a smashing blow dealt to a week-long Italian offensive which the Greeks say was personally directed by Premier Mussolini in Albania.

"You gave him (the enemy) the proper answer and taught him yet another lesson in Greek gallantry," said the message from the monarch to Greek troops. Greek spokesmen have claimed almost complete disorganization of the crack Eleventh Army of the Fascists in the Tepeleni sector during the Fascist offensive.

"When a week ago the enemy after long and careful preparations thought he was ready to overcome you and attempted his violent offensive in which he placed so many hopes," King George's message said, "you not only stopped him, but you dealt him a smashing blow."

Light Thrusts Repelled

A Government spokesman said the Italian forces showed no disposition to renew the attack on more than a minor scale today, and that their light thrusts were declared thrown back.

"Our artillery caused heavy losses to the enemy," the spokesman said.

King George told the army that the "whole civilized world follows with astonishment Greek feats of arms."

"You won because in your veins flows the blood of those who fought at Marathon and Thermopylae. You won because to enemy tanks you opposed your unflinching chests and granite will.

"I am very deeply moved by your gallant action. I thank you in the name of the fatherland and you may be assured every Greek has unshakeable faith that at all costs the honor and liberty of Greece will be defended."

15,000 Fascists Face Trap in Tepeleni

By the Associated Press

Bitolj, Yugoslavia, March 17.—Military observers at this town near the Albanian border said tonight the apparent failure of a week-long Italian offensive had so weakened Fascist forces that the Greeks now might be able to complete encirclement of Tepeleni, trapping at least 15,000 troops.

Tepeleni has held out for many weeks.

Some reports said the Italians made today what was believed a final offensive effort, with extensive attacks on the left wing of the northern sector.

Wave after wave of Italian infantry supported by artillery and low-flying airplanes rolled against the Greek lines, the reports said, but the Greeks lost no ground.

In the central sector, Italian attacks continued all day, but tonight the Greeks started a counterattack against broken Italian lines. The fighting was said to be violent, both sides throwing in many reserves.

Losses on both sides were reported considerable. The Greeks employed an old mountain warfare trick of withholding fire until attacking forces were within ambush range.

Scores of planes bombed trench positions of both sides and behind them. The Italians again threw tanks into the battle, but they were reported thrown back.

Contract Let for Plans For Medical Museum

The War Department yesterday awarded a contract to the firm of Eggers and Higgins of New York, for preliminary sketches and planning, including the recommendation of a site, for the Army Medical Library and Museum here.

Congress has authorized the War Department to prepare preliminary plans for the $3,750,000 project, which will be submitted to the legislators before an authorization bill for constructing the building is passed.

France Soon May Get U. S. Wheat Supply

quest should be raised with the American Red Cross, which now has it under consideration.

"It is, of course, obvious that the American Government must assure itself that the final consumption of all food sent takes place within the area of unoccupied France."

It is assumed that if the movement is made and the distribution is carried out satisfactorily, more grains will be sent in succeeding weeks and months. However, that would require British permission. Viscount Halifax, the British Ambassador, conferred with Welles this afternoon, but whether they discussed this question was not revealed.

Ambassador Henry-Haye appeared distinctly encouraged after his conference with Mr. Roosevelt.

"I was glad to find the President very much concerned about our needs," he said, "and from what I have heard I expect some sort of relief to start soon through the American Red Cross. It is not definite yet but the President realizes we have attained a limit of physical endurance."

According to officials, the plan contemplates the sending of wheat in manageable amounts as well as the supplies of clothing, vitamins and milk that are now being provided for children in the free zone. The questions under consideration turn upon the safeguards that should be erected to be certain that the supplies would not become diverted to other purposes or find their way into Germany.

If more is involved, such as more explicit commitments than have yet been received from Vichy that the French fleet and African bases will not be turned over to Germany, officials would not admit it.

Ambassador Henry-Haye said he agreed with the President that "in order that no one should be suspicious, all kinds of controls should be arranged regarding arrival, unloading and distribution." For those controls, he added, "the French are absolutely open to any suggestion."

The controls, he continued, "may be as strict as necessary, and we feel the better informed the American people are, the less fear they will have about the final distribution of food supplies."

This was interpreted as signifying that the Vichy government was agreeing to any controls over distribution that the United States has put forward, not only for the two projected shipments but for others that it hopes will be made later.

"The bread ration is diminishing every day and when the slice of bread grows thinner, the danger to health grows worse," the Ambassador said.

Although the Red Cross may provide wheat at the outset as a gift, M. Henry-Haye made clear that his government hoped for an extension of the plan to provide for periodic shipments for a long time through outright purchases by France in this country.

"We are not asking for gifts," he said. "We simply want to use our frozen funds, or a small part of them, to buy food."

When Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau was asked about the use of the frozen funds to pay for food, he replied:

"If and when the Secretary of State writes me a letter asking that certain funds be released for purposes compatible with the foreign policy of this Government, we just do it, that's all. All I ask is a written letter. I have not had such a letter."

While the Ambassador was at the White House Senator Edwin C. Johnson, of Colorado, predicted in a speech in the Senate that "the casualties from starvtion will exceed the casualties from battle" unless Great Britain relaxes her blockade to permit food to go to Europe.

During this year, he said, as many as 37,000,000 Europeans face starvation as a result of "the most barbarous thing that has ever happened on this earth." He predicted that there will be "millions of stunted and deformed children" unless something is done to alleviate the situation.

Senator Henrik Shipstead, of Minnesota, interjected that "we fed Belgium during the last war and there were no complaints that the food fell into enemy hands."

FBI Joins Hunt for Saboteurs in Train Wreck Fatal to 5

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

FOUR KILLED AS COACHES PLUNGE INTO RIVER—Light from an open hearth of a steel mill gleams across the Ohio River on part of the wrecked Pennsylvania Railroad train that plunged into freezing waters of the Ohio River at Baden, Pa., killing four persons and injuring 114. Officials of the railroad blamed saboteurs for the train's derailment.

By the Associated Press

Baden, Pa., March 17.—A determined hunt for saboteurs blamed for the Pennsylvania Railroad passenger train wreck in which five were killed and 114 injured last night was started today by Federal, State and railroad agencies.

The Cleveland to Pittsburgh express, roaring through a blinding snowstorm at a mile-a-minute, struck a loosened rail a mile from this Ohio River community and hurtled from the tracks.

The locomotive and tender overturned and five cars plunged down a 50-foot embankment. Two of the cars, a baggage car and a day coach, splashed into 6 feet of water in the Ohio River and the others rolled to the river's edge.

Only three of the 112 passengers and 11 crewmen escaped injury or death. Many of those hurt were members of families returning to Pittsburgh from weekend visits in Cleveland.

"Definite Evidence of Sabotage"

F. W. Smith, vice president of the railroad, asserted "definite evidence of sabotage" had been discovered and announced a $5,000 reward had been posted for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the persons responsible.

"That the train was wrecked deliberately was established upon inspection of the track," he said. "All spikes on both sides had been pulled from the outside rail, next to the river. One end of the rail, the end facing the oncoming locomotive, was moved 22 inches. The bolts had been removed from the splice bars."

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Interstate Commerce Commission, the Pennsylvania public utility commission, the railroad and State motor police and Beaver County authorities rushed to the scene.

Samuel McKee, agent in charge of the FBI office in Pittsburgh, promised "a complete and exhaustive investigation" but declined further comment.

Veteran railroaders expressed belief a disgruntled railroad employe or a former railroad worker tampered with the rail because it was skillfully done, without breaking a signal wire attached to the rail.

Luxury Train Passes Safely

The Manhattan Limited, a luxury train carrying more passengers, thundered over the same tracks only 20 minutes earlier and railroaders said the rail removal apparently was aimed at the bigger, faster train but was not accomplished in time.

Spokesmen for the railroad said, however, they knew of no one aboard the limited "of particular prominence or importance" who might have been the objective of a sabotage plot.

A track foreman said it "looked like there were two men responsible and they knew what they were doing. They were old railroad men." A claw bar "bright with recent use," which apparently had been employed to pry out the spikes, was found near the tracks.

Victims of the wreck were A. R. Weigel, 57, Alliance, Ohio, the engineer, crushed by tons of coal hurled from the tender; Harry Kennedy, 45, a Pennsylvania Railroad employe, Pittsburgh; Donald McDonald, 9-month-old son of Mrs. Elizabeth McDonald of Altoona, Pa., who was seriously hurt herself; Mrs. Rose Jagielski, 27, Pittsburgh, and Conrad Lebel, Cleveland, a railroad conductor, who was "deadheading" on the train.

Miss McGeachy to Speak

Miss Mary Craig McGeachy, of the ministry of economic warfare with the British Embassy, will address the monthly meeting of the Bryn Mawr Club this afternoon at 4:30 at the residence of Mrs. Harry L. Grant at 2210 P Street Northwest.

Spare Athens Or Be Bombed, Rome Warned

By the Associated Press

Rome, March 17.—The British have warned the Axis that any bombing of Athens will bring a retaliatory bombing of Rome, so far unscathed in the air war, reliable quarters said today.

The British threat was said to have been conveyed to the Italian and German governments through Vatican channels, but nothing could be learned from Vatican circles concerning the matter.

Neither Rome nor Athens, with their monuments to rival ancient civilization, has been bombed in the nine months that Italy has been in the war or in the four and a half months she has been at war with Greece.

Piraeus, port near Athens, has been bombed frequently, and Rome has had its air raid alarms, however.

Two days after the outbreak of hostilities between Greece and Italy, the official Rome radio denied Italian airmen had bombed "the cradle" of Greek civilization, and declared Athens would be spared aerial attack as long as Rome is exempt.

Fliers Then Recalled

On November 6 R. A. Butler, British parliamentary undersecretary for foreign affairs, declared that since Italian fliers were participating in attacks on London from bases on the Channel coast, the government reserved "full liberty of action in regard to Rome." The Italian government since has recalled nearly all its fliers from France.

On November 13 some members of Parliament urged the British government not to be "squeamish" about attacking Rome.

From the African front the Italian high command declared the British were waging a vigorous attack on Cheren, Italian stronghold barring the way to the Eritrean capital, and that Fascist troops were beating off assault after assault.

The British lost five planes in a raid on Diredawa in Ethiopia, it was said.

Warfare in Albania against the Greeks was said to have relapsed to "normal patrol and artillery action."

The Rome radio in a broadcast received by C. B. S. in New York said, "There have been actions of some importance" in the Tepeleni sector of Albania in recent days and that "large scale day and night operations" were carried out by the Italian air force.

But snow and mud make large-scale operations impossible now, it was said.

"Every Greek attack has petered out against the stubborn Italian resistance," the broadcast said. Thirty-eight "enemy" planes were reported shot down in the last ten days.

Countess Did Not Attend Benefit

The Post reported erroneously yesterday that the Countess Miriam Caracciolo de Melito, of Warrenton, Va., the daughter of Oscar Crosby, attended a dinner at the Red Fox Tavern in Middleburg Sunday for the benefit of the British War Relief.

It was the Countess' sister, Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller, of Warrenton, who attended the dinner. The Countess was not present. The dinner celebrated the arrival of the "Iron Duke," a British mobile canteen, which is now touring Virginia.

The Post regrets the error.

THE FINE CAR WITH THE LOW PRICE

ONLY $25 MORE FOR AN EIGHT IN ANY MODEL!

PERHAPS YOU'VE SEEN the new Pontiac "Torpedo" described as "the Fine Car with the Low Price" and wondered a little bit about that statement.

You can accept the "fine car" part without any doubt, we believe—especially if you've examined a new Pontiac. For then you know that, in addition to being big and handsome, it is upholstered, trimmed and finished with all the emphasis on quality and detail characteristic of the fine-car field.

That "low price" part may stop you, however. Can the new Pontiac—one of the smartest-looking, easiest-riding cars on the road today—actually be low-priced? Well, here are the facts:

Pontiac prices begin at $828*. A new 1941 Pontiac "Torpedo" will cost you so little more than the "lowest-priced three" that the difference will amount to only a very few dollars per month. What's more, Pontiac's economy of operation and upkeep permits you to drive for practically the same money that a lesser car requires.

Yes, the new Pontiac, with its body by Fisher, has earned the title, "the Fine Car with the Low Price." Try a new Pontiac before you put your money in something less desirable.

Liner Bremen Still Aflame In Nazi Port

London Hints R. A. F. Bomb Started Blaze On 51,731-Ton Ship

By the Associated Press

Berlin, March 17.—A big fire raged on late today aboard the $20,000,000 German liner Bremen, idle pride of Germany's merchant fleet and one-time holder of the blue ribbon of the Atlantic.

The whereabouts of the 51,731 ton liner were not disclosed in so many words and the cause of the flames was undetermined, but an account of the fire by D. N. B., German official news agency, was carried here under a Bremen date line. The liner completed a spectacular hide-and-seek dash across the Atlantic to a home port soon after the war began.

Late today, authorities said, the fire, which was reported to have started yesterday, was "big" and was "still continuing." They declined to give further details.

The British Broadcasting Corporation hinted that the Bremen was the victim of a British air raid. The announcer said in a broadcast heard in New York by C. B. S.:

"It will be recalled that the R. A. F. last Thursday night carried out a particularly heavy raid on the German docks and shipyards at Hamburg and Bremen."

With its band blaring "Deutschland Uber Alles," the Bremen slipped out of New York Harbor on August 30, 1939, three days before the European war started with Germany's invasion of Poland. She made her way to Murmansk, northern Russian port, eluding British warships in a fog.

The Germans announced her arrival in a home port in December, 1939. As the liner picked her way down the Norwegian coast the British reported the submarine Salmon sighted her, but withheld its torpedoes because it did not want to sink her without warning.

In the war at sea, meantime, informed Germans declared today that two British "battleships" had been torpedoed by Nazi planes off the Mediterranean Island of Crete.

The high command, omitting mention of this attack, reported that two armed merchantmen totaling 4,000 tons were sunk by the Luftwaffe yesterday 218 miles west of Ireland.

D. N. B. asserted a Nazi combat plane attacked a 4,000-ton vessel off Newcastle, England, today and left it in a sinking condition.

Bristol, Avonmouth and Portsmouth were targets of the Luftwaffe last night, the high command said.

Plane From Bolling Is Forced Down

Buffalo, N. Y., March 17 (AP).—An Army observation plane based at Langley Field, Va., was forced down late today near Buffalo when it ran out of gasoline. It had come from Bolling Field, Washington, D. C.

The pilot, Maj. H. E. Rice, Sergt. H. W. Webb and Private Ranalli were unhurt.

Long Convoys Reach Greece Unmolested, Briton Reports

By the United Press

London (Tuesday), March 18.—Eye-witness reports of long British convoys moving unmolested along the route from Alexandria, Egypt, to Greece, within 10 miles of the Italian Dodecanese islands were published in morning papers today.

W. F. Hartin of the Daily Mail, writing from Alexandria, described traveling in a convoy of British, Norwegian and Danish merchant vessels through the Kasos straits between Crete and the Dodecanese island of Scarpanto, on the direct route between Egypt and Piraeus, the port of Athens.

(Reports have been current in the Balkans for days that Britain has landed a large expeditionary force in Greece.)

Hartin wrote:

"For more than a fortnight I have been watching the work of the navy in the eastern Mediterranean . . . I can state from my own experiences that never have units of the Mediterranean fleet been busier.

"I have been a confidential witness of much of this work but even now the time has not yet come to give a full picture of the scene and the scope of what is being undertaken."

The Daily Sketch published an almost identical dispatch under the headline:

"Silent Navy Tackles Biggest Job: Convoys Go Trough Dodecanese."

A similar story appeared in the Daily Telegraph.

Hartin said he had watched from a British escort craft while British, Norwegian and Danish merchant vessels passed unscathed within easy striking distance of enemy territory.

He said that on one occasion he was aboard a British warship while the fleet air arm heavily bombed Scarpanto which lies across the Kasos Straits off the east end of Crete, on the principal route between Alexandria and Piraeus.

"The ships we were escorting were not mere silhouettes. . . . We had to get through those straits do or die," he wrote. "Then came sparks from bombs 10 miles away. Twinkles of antiaircraft fire danced in the sky, but we got through unmolested and arrived at our base with the precision of ferry service."

Hartin said that during these voyages he had seen long lines of cruisers steaming out to their routine tasks "as we chugged along with our stores of munitions and supplies."

Nonstop Ocean Clipper Tested on Puget Sound

Seattle, March 17 (AP).—A new Boeing clipper, equipped for nonstop transatlantic flights with motors capable of taking her off the water in 30 seconds, was towed into Puget Sound today for flight tests.

She was first of six improved clippers being constructed—three for Great Britain for the maintenance of empire communications, and three for United States transatlantic service.

Yugoslavs, Turks Mapping Defense

Skoplje have been immensely strengthened within the last 48 hours, while the Turkish general staff, without withdrawing a man from the Chatalja and Kavak lines—the Turkish forces on these lines are reported to number over 500,000 highly trained and well-equipped men—has moved across the Dardanelles four to five divisions (variously estimated at 60,000 to 80,000 men) of highly mobile troops from the Anatolian armies.

These Turkish divisions are believed to be massed along a line running parallel with the Maritza River, between the towns of Ipsala and Karpashu, north of the Kavak line. While none of the plans is known, it is believed that in the event of a German attack through Grecian Thrace in an attempt to reach the Aegean, the Turkish general staff intends to push northwest to the Bulgarian plain, reversing the tactics employed by Gen. Savoff in the famous Battle of Kirk Kilisse during the first Balkan war in October, 1912.

In that battle the Bulgarians succeeded in driving the Turks back to Corlu, whence they were routed along the shores of the Sea of Marmara to Chatalja.

This time, it is believed, the main Turkish forces are equipped to fight their way along the left bank of the Maritza River almost to Plovdiv.

Meanwhile the Yugoslav armies would wait on the defensive, ready to cut either the Vardar or Struma Valleys, while the British forces based on the Island of Lemnos would come into action.

Germans in Paris Arrest Jay Allen, U. S. Reporter

Berlin, March 17.—A. D. N. B. (official German news agency) dispatch from Paris today said that Jay Allen, correspondent for the North American Newspaper Alliance, had been arrested by German military officials.

The agency, without giving the date of the arrest, said the charge was that he attempted to recross the Demarcation line between occupied and unoccupied France without correct papers. Another American, whose name was not given, was reported arrested with him.

(The N. A. N. A. office in New York said that the last it had heard from Allen was a week or so ago when he was at Vichy, capital of unoccupied France.)

D. N. B. said that an official of the United States Embassy at Paris, after investigating the case, decided not to take diplomatic steps.

Embassy Acts in Berlin

(Meanwhile, the American Embassy in Berlin urgently requested the German Foreign Office to arrange for a member of the embassy staff immediately to visit Richard C. Hottelet, an American correspondent, now held by the German secret police.

(The State Department made this known in Washington after receiving a report from the embassy. The embassy asked also that Hottelet be allowed to engage counsel.

(Hottelet, a member of the United Press staff in Berlin, was arrested Saturday of what D. N. B. described as "strong suspicions of espionage.")

Writer for Chicago Paper

Allen, who was born in Seattle, Wash., in 1900, has spent much of his time in Europe since 1924 as a correspondent for the Chicago Tribune and other newspapers.

Since last October he had been in Vichy and North Africa for the North American Newspaper Alliance. He also contributed to The Nation, weekly magazine.

His wife, the former Ruth Austin, of Woodburn, Oreg., whom he married in 1924, said at her New York apartment today that she did not know Allen planned to go into occupied France. She said she last hear from him about two weeks ago. They have one child, Michael, 13.

Titulescu Dies At 67 of Anemia

Cannes, March 17 (U.P.).—Nicholas Titulescu, former foreign minister of Rumania, died tonight of pernicious anemia resulting from tuberculosis. He was 67.

Titulescu had been out of politics for two years. He resigned after a difference of opinion with King Carol on foreign policy.

He had quit politics once before, in 1936, when he went into self-imposed exile for 16 months because of threats against his life. He was an opponent of the Iron Guard, which reputedly was responsible for the threats.

In his 1936 retirement he nearly died of poisoning and his friends feared he had been poisoned by an assassin. He returned to Rumania from Switzerland late in 1937 and was active in the Balkan Kingdom's politics until his diagreement with Carol.

A Young Singing Actor Petitions the Congress

Phil Regan Patriotically Urges New Holiday; The Earle Untangles an Involved Situation; This, That and the Other about the Theater

OUR OLD FRIEND, PHIL REGAN, has an idea. The silver-voiced and incorrigibly prankish Mr. Regan, who probably never will live down the pseudonym of "singing cop," because he once was on the New York police force, is a high-voltage young Irish-American with a deep and reverent regard for the institutions of freedom that have made America great. His present preoccupation is purely patriotic.

BELL

Mr. Regan's completely noble notion—and this is written in no vein of flippancy—is that there should be a new national holiday in America known as Democracy Day. To this end he has addressed a brief and exceedingly well-termed letter to all the members of both houses of the Congress and other elected officials of the Federal Establishment in Washington. It puts up a pretty stiff case on behalf of the Declaration of Independence, Constitution of the United States, the Bill of Rights and other bulwarks of that liberty of individual thought and action for which free men throughout the world are now battling the aggressor nations, whose precepts of humanitarianism are couched in such pernicious descriptives as "Communism," "Fascism" and "Naziism."

"I do not pretend to be a politician, a statesman or even a lobbyist for a just patriotic cause," says Mr. Regan. "I am merely a public-spirited American, offering what I sincerely believe to be a good idea. It is my hope that during the present session of the Congress, a group of you patriotic gentlemen will act upon this suggestion and create, introduce and pass a bill which will help awaken our people to the need of preserving our Democratic form of government."

More power to him. And I'll even defy the jail by doing a little lobbying for him on my own account—heavily overdrawn, as usual.

As nearly as we are able to estimate it, there is nothing too ominous in an occasional innocent and white lie. When we said yesterday that Tallulah Bankhead's cocktail party at the Mayflower came at an hour that found us lashed to the masthead, we honestly believed it. But by defiance of all editorial responsibility, premolded duties and deadlines, we managed to make it, anyhow. For only 15 minutes, mind you. We remained in the exhilarating presence of the Flower of the South for a full two hours, escaping the humiliating penalty of finally being heaved out on our ear by the merest eyelash. Miss Bankhead was charming, gracious and talkative and we were as absorbent as a sponge. The thing will be coming along in print tomorrow—by the grace of Providence and your bad luck!

Now that the business is finally threshed out—if it is—the next stage bill at the Earle Theater will be a divertissement in Harry Anger's best manner, which is pretty good, bearing the title of "Latins vs. Manhattans!" It will feature Latin and American artists in a gaucherie in which the "Americas join forces." This is the culmination of a bit of travail. Charlie Spivak and His Orchestra first were booked into the March 21 stage spot at the Earle. When insuperable obstacles eliminated Mr. Spivak and his gang, Enric Madriguera and his rumba and conga music were scribbled in on the booking sheets. Radio commitments dropped this one also across the foul line. So "Latins vs. Manhattans" is what you will get.

As late as 9:25 Sunday night, the Trans-Lux Theater added to its current program a special Paramount Newsreel coverage of the President's call for unity addressed to the Nation only a comparatively few hours before. The film will run through Thursday. Very probably it also is on other downtown screens, but there it is at the Trans-Lux, whether or no.

Ruth Draper has received so many requests from her Washington admirers for sketches not included on her regular program, while touring with her nephew, Paul Draper, that she has rearranged her schedule for her portions of their joint revue at the National next week. Her newly arranged alignment of character skits will appear in these columns on Wednesday morning, if you can contrive to wait until then. Paul Draper's dances will be something to see, set to the music of the world's greatest composers.

It is worth remembering by the younger generation—perhaps we mean the youngest—that "Robin Hood" and his merry men will transform the National Theater stage into Sherwood Forest on Saturday morning, when Clare Tree Major's Children's Theater of New York will present her new dramatic version of the famed legend. Dr. Sigmund Spaeth has compiled the special musical setting for this notable production.

Personal-Aside-to-the-Weatherman Note

What's the big idea? This is March 18.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollwood, March 17.

In talking with Bob Montgomery I discovered that Director Greg La Cava has really started something. He's set a precedent that would be well to follow, but I doubt if many producers will. It's this: He works five days a week, Monday through Friday. He's been 15 years trying to bring that about, but now that he's his own boss he does as he likes.

HOPPER

Hollywood won't believe it yet, but in these five days he accomplishes more than other companies do in seven. When you're on his set you work because you have the joy of looking forward to Saturday and Sunday. We all know that on Saturday actors, director and producer sit around and grouse about not being able to go to the football or baseball game, races or whatever it is they've set their hearts on. Sure, it may be wrong, but it's human nature, and Hollywood hasn't licked that yet.

That right guy, Producer Mark Hellinger, has so many offers since getting his release from Warners that he's taking a week off to study the landscape and make the right decision. He will.

When Eddie Horton completes his role in "Sandy Steps Out" he'll take his mother motoring to New York. She wants to see those white lights—and principally Ed Wynn's show, and that other New York hit—"Poison and Old Lace," as she calls it. They'll return via New Orleans to see if there are any antiques down there Eddie's missed.

With a batting battery like D. Lamour, B. Crosby, and B. Hope, how can you miss? They definitely hit in "The Road to Zanzibar." The comedy is strictly zany, with Bing out-talking Hope all the way. Dottie doesn't get a chance to be anything but decorative, but boy!—she does that well. Crosby and Hope, two of the best ad-libbers in the business, slipped in a lot of their own gags.

You'll die laughing at a sequence where Hope wrestles a gorilla. Incidentally, Dottie's developing a different personality. I like it. This gang showed us the "Road to Singapore," then "Zanzibar." I'd like to see them tackle the Burma Road.

'Little Foxes,' At National, Still a 'Must'

By Nelson B. Bell

"THE LITTLE FOXES." Herman Shumlin presents Tallulah Bankhead in a return engagement of the play in three acts by Lillian Hellman. Staged by Mr. Shumlin; settings by Howard Bay and costumes by Aline Bernstein. At the National Theater.

THE CAST

Addie ..... Abbie Mitchell
Cal ..... John Marriott
Birdie Hubbard ..... Marie Carroll
Oscar Hubbard ..... Carl Benton Reid
Leo Hubbard ..... Dan Duryea
Regina Giddens ..... Tallulah Bankhead
William Marshall ..... Lee Baker
Benjamin Hubbard ..... Charles Dingle
Alexandra Giddens ..... Eugenia Rawls
Horace Giddens ..... Frank Conroy

Seldom, if ever, has the return engagement of a major play so completely matched the excellence of its initial local performance as was the case in the National Theater last night, when Tallulah Bankhead and her superlative supporting cast registered their 740th appearance in Lillian Hellman's bitter drama of "The Little Foxes."

"The Little Foxes" is not a pleasant play, but it is an infinitely interesting and disturbing one. It deals with the two brothers and a sister of the Hubbard family, intent upon the material benefits that are to accrue from a single business deal. Each, in his or her own way, is a victim of some sort of social or economic frustration. In the business compact with the wealthy gentleman from Chicago they perceive emancipation from all the bonds that have shackled them close to a narrow horizon. The consummation of this important business transaction brings out the most vicious qualities with which nature has endowed one of the most maliciously antagonistic families ever brought to the footlights from the usually placid and kindly precincts of the Deep South.

Benjamin and Oscar Hubbard are a precious pair of business brigands, to whom the end always is to be attended by whatever means the exigencies of the moment may require—even to the thievery of such an item as $88,000 in bonds. Birdie Hubbard, the cringing wife of the lesser of the two big-business buccaneers, is an appealing and pathetic symbol of persecution and the second generation is indicative of a distressing degree of family decay that threatens much future evil and accomplishes none of its seemingly inevitable results.

Short and Ugly Word Needed

Regina Giddens, the granite-hearted wife of the only forthright character in the drama, is the sort of woman usually described by a brief and ugly canine word not permitted in the gentle usages of the daily press. By one of fate's amazing perversities and the skill of Miss Hellman, she is made the keystone in a dramatic structure that is as solidly builded as the pyramids and as grippingly repellent as a footlight study of the Borgias or the Macbeths.

It is to the role of Regina Giddens that Tallulah Bankhead brings the full resources of a mature and minute talent for depicting characters that are not quite all they should have been, save in a single and supreme capacity to fascinate an audience. Miss Bankhead's Regina is an icy and irritating study of an instinctively murderous wife and an incomprehensibly heartless mother. Regina's primary interest always is Regina and whatever falls under the demoralizing drive of her relentless ambition is the mere dropping of a withered leaf. Miss Bankhead plays the role, just as she has for the past two and a half years, up to what is customarily referred to as the hilt. It is a ruthless and memorably resourceful portrayal that the star gives of her role.

With one exception, the subordinate cast—and that is hardly the deserved adjective—is the same as appeared with Miss Bankhead on the same stage when "The Little Foxes" first was presented here a year ago last month.

Cast Holds to Top Form

Frank Conroy continues in the sympathetic and vital role of Horace Giddens, whose fatal heart attack makes possible the triumph of his wife's most sinister designs. Charles Dingle still is the perfect embodiment of the crafty spirit of Benjamin Hubbard and Carl Benton Reid again is the craven younger brother, whose moral deficiencies are reflected in his son. The son continues to be played, with appropriate surrender to family degeneration, by Dan Duryea, and Eugenia Rawls once more is ingenuous and charming in the role of Regina's daughter, who finally summons the courage to defy her devilish and despicable mother. In the role of the cruelly suppressed Birdie Hubbard, Marie Carroll succeeds Patricia Collinge. During the first two acts, Miss Carroll seems to lack something of Miss Collinge's command of the situations in which Birdie so unhappily finds herself, but in the last act completely redeems a performance that at first seemed headed for "invidious comparisons." Those who never saw Miss Collinge in the part never will know the difference.

Despite the long road tour of "The Little Foxes," Howard Bay's single setting has been kept in a remarkable state of preservation and the costuming still is an accurate reproduction of Southern modes as they prevailed at the turn of the century. All of which is to say that this drab and discreetly diabolic drama is as good as it ever was and a "must" on the list of any sagacious playgoer.

'Hillbilly?'

JUDY CANOVA,
the gifted young singing comedienne, usually supposed to be as grotesque as she title role of "Sis Hopkins," will appear in the Republic picturization of the old Rose Melville perennial

The Chicago Tycoon and Regina

LEE BAKER AND TALLULAH BANKHEAD
as they appear in Lillian Hellman's acid drama of "The Little Foxes," which last night opened a return engagement in the National Theater. Last night's performance, by the way, marked Miss Bankhead's 740th in the role of Regina Giddens, the wife and mother with a heart of granite and a whim of Bessemer steel. She offers a superlative portrayal

Leonard Lyons:

New York, March 17.

LORD HALIFAX invited Larry Adler to attend a reception at the British Embassy and to play the harmonica. Adler asked Halifax to name his favorite song, and the Ambassador requested "Danny Boy." Dean Acheson asked Adler to play "The Blue Danube." The harmonica player obliged and concluded with a series of Viennese waltzes . . . Lady Halifax then asked if he would oblige by playing her favorite music—"Boogie Woogie." And so there, beneath the vaulted ceiling of the embassy and facing the long walls lined with the ancient portraits of the dead and gloried Kings of Britain, Larry Adler placed his lips around the harmonica and played the soulful strains of that modern air, "Beat Me Daddy, Eight to a Bar."

LYONS

A MOVIE SHORT was made publicizing the activities for British war relief. Victor Moore was photographed while he was knitting a sweater. Gertrude Lawrence and Rachel Crothers sat at sewing machines, puting the finishing touches to some clothing for the children of London . . . "Here in America," said Rachel Crothers, "we're all singing 'There'll Always Be An England'" . . . "While in London," added Miss Lawrence, "they're singing 'God Bless America.'"

CANADA LEE, who plays the role of Biggers in "The Native Son," which opened here this week, received his draft call Friday . . . Billy Leeds' $2,000,000 yacht will leave its Manhattan dock this week for a 17-day trip through the Panama Canal to Los Angeles. Leeds will board it there for one final cruise to Honolulu. After that he expects the Federal Government to requisition it . . . Now that two plays and three sketches about William Saroyan have received unfavorable notices from the critics, the producers of "Pins & Needles" have invited Saroyan to show 'em how to do it—by writing a satiric sketch about himself.

GIBRALTAR REMAINS the only British-owned territory in Europe which is free of blackouts. This because it is separated from La Linea, Spain, by only a short strip of land. And the Gibraltar officials feel that as long as La Linea's lights are on each night, so, too, may theirs be, for it is impossible for an aviator, flying at night, to distinguish where one city ends and the other begins . . . The small strip of land between the cities was established as an International Zone after the last war—but Franco's troops of Spain have violated the pact by erecting eight pill-boxes in that zone. Maj. Gen. Nason MacFarlane, in charge of Gibraltar's defenses, was questioned about this: "We think that's all right," he assured. "That's purely a defensive measure—to prevent us from attacking them."

WHEN THE MOVIE, "Hellzapoppin'," is completed it will have dialogue blanks, wherein the audience will be invited to shout cues at the players . . . Col. Jay C. Flippen is expected to take over half the Broadway assignment in that show, when Olsen & Johnson leave for Hollywood . . . The first Broadway bandleader to be drafted is Zinn Arthur. He's worried only about the 11 members of his orchestra. And so he's offering his band, intact, plus his $5,000 music library of special arrangements, as well as the uniforms, stands, etc., to any Bandleader who can assure the musicians of continued employment . . . ASCAP will pay the $500 fines assessed by the court against its individual directors in the anti-trust suit settled week.

MOSS HART told Clifford Odets that he's spending some of his "Lady in the Dark" royalties in a new sound system at his Bucks County farm—a system whereby the music played by his phonograph and radio can be piped in to the bathhouse at his pool . . . Odets, who has perfected a new method of achieving almost perfect sound reproduction, told Hart of the equipment. "It will be marvelous then," sighed Hart, "listening to good music, at night alone in the garden" . . . "Alone?" said Odets. "You'll feel bad—listening alone to music, at night, outdoors. The better it is, the worse it is."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, March 17 (INS).—How would you like to be paid $10,000 for 30 words? Well, that's what happened to two young men—Jack Rubin, an exploitation agent, and Oscar Brodney, a radio idea man, who were paid this amount by Bruce Manning for "Appointment for Love," a story for Charles Boyer. The two boys cannot write a line but they have ideas and it was the mere idea that they sold.

PARSONS

Manning said he was busy, but if they could tell their story in ten words he'd listen. They couldn't tell it in ten words but they could in 30, and Manning was so delighted he took the idea to Charles Boyer who agreed to star in the picture. Felix Jackson and Bruce himself are writing the script. Manning, you remember, is Joe Pasternak's protege and of course he will produce the Boyer opus, too.

Mark Hellinger, who had offers from three studios after he left Warners, signed a contract Friday with Darryl F. Zanuck to produce pictures for Twentieth Century-Fox. Mark, who in his spare time writes a Sunday newspaper page, is checking in at the studio bright and early tomorrow morning, and, being the type who likes to work, he will get busy immediately.

Judy Canova, who is one of the most able comediennes on the screen, can consider 1941 her year. And now Judy has signed a contract to make one picture a year at Paramount.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Martha Raye and Neal Lang, Florida hotel man, will wed as soon as her divorce from David Rose is final. The Margaret Sullavan-Leland Heyward baby is expected at any time now. Gertrude Niesen, remembering to be serious when she dined with Marcus Goodrich at the Zebra Room. He is the author of the widely discussed "Delilah."

Ruth Hussey and John Shelton have been keeping dates. Wonder what has happened to Raphael Hakim? Gail Patrick and Baron Polan talking business several evenings last week. Jack Carson, the movie actor, and Kay St. Germaine have dated the stork for October. John Garfield's father is seriously ill in New York. If he isn't better soon, John will be permitted to leave his picture and go to his father's bedside.

While on their trip east, Joan Blondell and Dick Powell will go to Dick's former home, Little Rock, Ark., where the premiere of "Model Wives" will be held. Seems as if everybody in town is going to the Screen Actors' gambol at the Cocoanut Grove tomorrow night.

6,000 Hear Roosevelt Open Art Gallery

was said, her Florida sunburn.

Diplomats from many countries, including those that have been ravaged in the European war, stood in the crowd as President Roosevelt swung from "the inheritance of these ancient times" to the brutality and destruction that now reign abroad. The treasures that adorned the galleries all about him, the President said, were not only works of art.

"Today," he said, "they are symbols of the human spirit, and of the world the freedom of the human spirit made—a world against which armies now are raised and countries overrun and men imprisoned and their work destroyed.

"To accept, today, the work of German painters such as Holbein and Durer and of Italians like Botticelli and Raphael, and of painters of the Low Countries like Van Dyck and Rembrandt, and of famous Frenchmen, famous Spaniards—to accept this work today on behalf of the people of this democratic Nation is to assert the belief of the people of this Nation in a human spirit which now is everywhere endangered and which, in many countries where it first found form and meaning, has been rooted out and broken and destroyed.

"To accept this work today is to assert the purposes of the people of America that the freedom of the human spirit and human mind which has produced the world's great art and all its science—shall not utterly be destroyed . . .

"Freedom . . . Shall Go On

The bronze doors of the National Gallery of Art were opened at 8 p. m., two hours before the dedication ceremony, and a steady stream of Government officials, art connoisseurs, diplomats and society leaders poured through.

In the illumination provided by specially designed floodlights in the ceilings, they milled around Bologna's famous bronze figure of Mercury, and feasted their eyes on the masterpieces of Raphael, Perugino, Holbein, Rembrandt, Goya, Gainsborough and Gilbert Stuart.

Some of the things they saw must have reminded them of the fallibility of conquerors and the evanescent quality of conquests.

The approach of President Roosevelt at 10 o'clock was heralded by the scarlet-coated musicians of the Marine Band, who struck up "Hail to the Chief."

After the Rev. Dr. ZeBarney Phillips, chaplain of the Senate, had said the invocation, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, chairman of the board of trustees of the National Gallery, opened the ceremony of dedication.

Hughes Praises Mellon

The white-bearded Chief Justice praised the magnanimous spirit that led Andrew Mellon to request that the gallery not bear his name.

"This treasure house is at once a memorial, a symbol, and an opportunity," he said.

"Mr. Mellon's gift," he added, "has already prompted other great donations. And we may expect this gallery to be enriched by many treasures which can here find their best repository, where donors may feel that what they have collected with such loving and absorbing interest will give enjoyment and cultural advantages to millions of their fellow citizens."

Paul Mellon, son of the Pittsburgh financier-statesman-diplomat, told how his father began thinking of a great national gallery soon after he came to Washington to begin serving as Secretary of the Treasury under three Presidents.

"He felt the need of a national gallery in Washington, with a collection of art which might serve as the nucleus of a great national collection. He saw in his imagination a building adequate to contain that future, great collection.

"He hoped that the gallery would become a joint enterprise on the part of the Government, on the one hand, and of magnanimous citizens, on the other. That hope is already being realized.

"Mr. Kress, with extraordinary generosity and self-denial, has given his important collection of Italian paintings and sculpture, which you see here tonight. We know of other gifts that are coming in the future, such as the great Widener collection."

Mr. Mellon praised the latest donors—Chester Dale, Miss Ellen Bullard and three anonymous donors—and also paid tribute to all who had a hand in bringing the gallery to a realization, from the late John Russell Pope, the architect, to the craftsmen who set the steel and the marble.

He thereupon formally turned over to President Roosevelt the gallery and his father's collection "to be dedicated forever to the use and enjoyment of the people of the United States."

Mr. Kress, 78-year-old New York chain store magnate, then presented his renowned collection. He expressed regret that Mr. Mellon was not there to share in the fulfillment of his admirable undertaking.

"It is a great privilege to give our best to our country," he said. "As an older person, I feel this particularly now when we are asking our young men to place their lives at the disposal and service of their government.

"I love my paintings, having lived surrounded by them for many years. Now the walls of my home are bare of Italian paintings and I shall miss them. But I am happy in the thought that, during my lifetime, my collection intact is settled in my country, in a permanent home within this magnificent structure. It is my hope that this contribution will grow in appreciation with the passing years, to be enjoyed by all future generations."

Text of Roosevelt Speech Opening Gallery

Following is the text of President Roosevelt's address at the dedication of the National Gallery of Art:

It is with a very real sense of satisfaction that I accept for the people of the United States and on their behalf this national gallery and the collections it contains. The giver of the building has matched the richness of his gift with the modesty of his spirit, stipulating that the gallery shall be known not by his name but by the Nation's. And those other collectors of paintings and of sculpture who have already joined, or who propose to join, their works of art to Mr. Mellon's—Mr. Kress and Mr. Widener—have felt the same desire to establish, not a memorial to themselves, but a monument to the art they love and the country to which they belong. To these collections we now gratefully add the gift from Miss Ellen Bullard and three anonymous donors, which marks the beginning of the gallery's collection of prints; and also the loan collection of early American paintings from Mr. Chester Dale.

There have been, in the past, many gifts of great paintings and of famous works of art to the American people. Most of the wealthy men of the last century who bought, for their own satisfaction, the masterpieces of European collections, ended by presenting their purchases to their cities or their towns. Great works of art have a way of breaking out or private ownership into public use. They belong so obviously to all who love them—they are so clearly the property not of their single owners but of all men everywhere—that the private rooms and houses where they are hung become in time too narrow for their presence. The true collectors are the collectors who understand this—the collectors of great paintings who feel that they can never truly own, but only gather and preserve for all who love them, the treasures they have found.

A New Significance

But though there have been many public gifts of art in the past, the gift of this national gallery, dedicated to the entire nation and containing a considerable part of the most important work brought to this country from the continent of Europe, has necessarily a new significance. It signifies a relation—a new relation here made visible in paint and in stone—between the whole people of this country and the old inherited tradition of the arts. And we shall remember that these halls of beauty, the creation of a great American architect, combine the classicism of the past with the convenience of today.

In accepting this building and the paintings it contains, the people of the United States accept a part in that inheritance for themselves. They accept it for themselves not because this gallery is given to them—though they are thankful for the gift. They accept it for themselves because, in the past few years, they have come to understand that the inheritance is theirs and that, like other inheritors of other things of value, they have a duty toward it.

There was a time when the people of this country would not have thought that the inheritance of art belonged to them or that they had responsibilities to guard it. A few generations ago, the people of this country were taught by their writers and by their critics and by their teachers to believe that art was something foreign to America and to themselves—something imported from another continent and from an age which was not theirs—something they had no part in, save to go to see it in a guarded room on holidays or Sundays.

Part of Americans

But recently, within the last few years, they have discovered that they have a part. They have seen in their own towns, in their own villages, in schoolhouses, in postoffices, in the back rooms of shops and stores, pictures painted by their sons, their neighbors—people they have known and lived beside and talked to. They have seen, accross these last few years, rooms full of painting by Americans, walls covered with the painting of Americans—some of it good, some of it not good, but all of it native, human, eager and alive—all of it painted by their own kind in their own country, and painted about things they know and look at often and have touched and loved.

The people of this country know now, whatever they were taught or thought they knew before, that art is not something just to be owned, but something to be made: that it is the act of making and not the act of owning which is art. And knowing this they know also that art is not a treasure in the past or an importation from another country, but part of the present life of all the living and creating peoples—all who make and build; and, most of all, the young and vigorous peoples who have made and built our present wide country.

It is for this reason that the people of America accept the inheritance to these ancient arts. Whatever these paintings may have been to men who looked at them a generation back—today they are not only works of art; today they are the symbols of the human spirit, and of the world the freedom of the human spirit made—a world against which armies now are raised and countries overrun and men imprisoned and their work destroyed.

Spirit Endangered

To accept, today, the work of German painters such as Holbein and Durer and of Italians like Botticelli and Raphael, and of painters of the Low Countries like Van Dyck and Rembrandt, and of famous Frenchmen, famous Spaniards—to accept this work today on behalf of the people of this democratic Nation is to assert the belief of the people of this Nation in a human spirit which now is everywhere endangered and which in many countries where it first found form and meaning, has been rooted out and broken and destroyed.

To accept this work today is to assert the purpose of the people of America that the freedom of the human spirit and human mind which has produced the world's great art and all its science—shall not be utterly destroyed.

Seventy-eight years ago, in the third year of the War Between the States men and women gathered here in Washington to see the dome above the Capitol completed and the bronze Goddess of Liberty set upon the top. It had been an expensive and laborious business, diverting money and labor from the prosecution of the war, and certain citizens found much to criticize. There were new marble pillars in the Senate wing and a bronze door for the central portal and other such expenditures and embellishments. But Lincoln, when he heard the criticisms, answered: "If people see the Capitol going on, it is a sign we intend the Union shall go on."

We may borrow the words for our own. We too intend the Union shall go on. We intend it shall go on, carrying with it the great tradition of the human spirit which created it.

The dedication of this gallery to a living past, and to a greater and more richly living future, is the measure of this earnestness of our intention that the freedom of the human spirit shall go on.

WPA Guidebook, President Differ On Capitol Statue

Either President Roosevelt or the WPA is wrong.

In his speech dedicating the National Gallery of Art last night, the Chief Executive referred to the bronze figure atop the Capitol dome as the "Goddess of Liberty."

The WPA guidebook calls it Thomas Crawford's statue, "Freedom."

The figure has been called the Goddess of Liberty before, as well as the Goddess of Freedom and the statue of Freedom, but the best authorities agree the real name is, simply, "Freedom."

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN

Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes show that something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Art For All Time

Amid the world holocaust we sometimes think of ourselves as the custodians of civilization. However that may be, we have in custody some of the finest products of the creative spirit, and many of them went on view last night when the President dedicated and opened the new National Gallery of Art. The ceremony, a brilliant forerunner of lines of American art lovers down the centuries, brought a contrast into high relief. This, after all, is what we mean by the old order—the order which treats as a holy trust the dignity and efflorescence of individual effort, the order in which we seek to grow to higher things on the fruitage of all men. Art is no more confined to race or frontier than a rainbow or a storm. It can no more be produced by edict than a sunset. But in the New Order in Europe the Nazi elite, while fattening on old masters torn from ancient museums, are filling the public exhibitions with daubs in the name of totalitarian art.

It is our good fortune that, while galleries in Europe are being darkened or emptied or partly vacated, we in our country are being given more opportunity every year to renew the human spirit. Our Capital will take on greater distinction as the result of this latest acquisition. Inevitably the National Gallery will be compared in its conveniences with the great museums of Europe. In this respect the visitor will suffer no "museum fatigue" from walking and standing on parquet, for the flooring in the galleries is made of wood, and will be restful as the Boymans and the Binnerholf at Rotterdam, which have cork flooring.

But the flooring is a small detail in a structure designed magnificently and executed with devotion The classical form chosen by John Russell Pope, the architect, argues well the timeless spirit in which this gift to America was conceived. From every angle the inspiring exterior justifies the intricate pains to which the builders went in selecting every block of pink Tennessee marble so that the color shades from a delicate hue at the ground to the snowy white of the dome. Inside the rotunda the green Italian marble of the columns, the Rockwood Alabama stone of the walls and the dark Vermont marble of the floor were selected and fitted with the same care. The thousands of invited guests last night saw the rich art collections of the late Andrew W. Mellon and of Samuel H. Kress by the best and most unobtrusive artificial light science could devise. But the millions to come will be able to see everything by daylight. In the galleries the backgrounds have been chosen with attention to the colors and textures best adapted to each school and period, and even the furniture, which permits examination of the pictures at ease, is harmonious with the surroundings.

And so the dream of Andrew Mellon has come true. But it is only a beginning. Five hundred paintings now are hanging in a museum with a capacity second only to the Louvre of Paris. The idea that was in Mr. Mellon's mind when he refused to let his gift be named after him will be at work in inspiring future donors to the National Gallery, as it already has inspired Mr. Kress in giving his pictures and Joseph E. Widener whose collection will soon be added. To America has descended the opportunity of giving to the people the creative heritage of the ages—a heritage which belongs to them all and which is another demonstration of our common destiny.

Back To Berbera

When the British evacuated Berbera, capital of British Somaliland, last August, Italian enthusiasm exceeded all bounds. One Fascist writer described the event "as a manifest sign of the inevitable British decline." The whole world, he added, "is witness to the extremely precipitous flight of the British troops routed by the Italians, who had many old and new accounts to settle with England, and who are settling them so brilliantly." Now, seven months later, the British are back in Berbera after an attack on that Italian-held port which was only weakly resisted. In itself the victory is of very minor moment. Its only significance is that it represents a further crumbling of the Italian war effort in East Africa, where their hopes, once raised so high, are now being rapidly dashed to the ground. A good part of Libya has gone; Italian Somaliland is in British hands; the Italian garrisons in Eritrea are fighting a rearguard action. Indeed, it may be only a matter of weeks before the costliest jewel in the Italian imperial crown, Ethiopia, is back in the hands of Haile Selassie.

Stripping Britain

The manner in which the British are divesting themselves of their foreign investments may be a historical fact of the first magnitude. Traditionally Britain has been the world's greatest market for world capital. Our transcontinental railroads, diamond mines in South Africa, cotton mills in China, rubber plantations in Malaya, traction lines in Argentina—these are the kinds of enterprise which have been fertilized with British money. Out of this investment, which has vastly enlarged the stock of the world's wealth, the British have taken their percentage for their capital outlay. And they have taken it in goods. That is the reason they have been able to import much more than they have sold, for Britain could be the world's greatest importer of goods only so long as she retained her capital stake in the world.

This reflection on the economic change that is coming over Britain is induced by the sale of the British-owned American Viscose Corporation, the world's greatest rayon producer. But the announcement is of interest for more immediate reasons than its contribution to a changed post-war financial status for Britain. It shows that Britain is earnestly trying to dispose of her so-called direct investments in America, or the plants or concerns which the British operate on American soil, as Americans operate branch establishments on British soil. In the recent lend-lease debates some loose allegations were uttered about Britain's insincerity in this respect. The critics seemed to forget that for every seller there must be a buyer. And buyers of entire corporations are few and far between, particularly in days when money formerly devoted to private enterprise is going more and more into the storm cellar type of riskless investment, such as tax-exempt bonds.

Similarly there was suspicion over the discrepancy in the estimates of British investments. Here the critics forgot that there is no established price for this type of property till a deal has been closed; only an estimate. Thus Secretary Morgenthau's and the Department of Commerce figures were reconcilable enough. The former put British investments at $900,000,000; the latter at $1,100,000,000. Taking the former figure, the sale of American Viscose means that the British have disposed of an estimated 10 per cent of their direct investments in the United States, though the total purchase price isn't yet known beyond the fact that there has been a down payment of $40,000,000.

Lest there be more misconceptions, it may be added that the $40,000,000 will stay right here. It is money needed for payment on contracts for war goods which had been concluded before there was any thought of the lend-lease measure. There are those who thought that this measure would stop these sales. It was felt that, in view of the new lend-leasing, the United States intended to take over the outstanding obligations. Evidently the President does not intend to grant any such moratorium. The Viscose sale is the proof, and this is said to be the forerunner of other dispositions of British assets which will be announced when American buyers are found. The news should thus give the quietus to those who felt that the President had decided to bail out old commitments as well as finance new commitments.

It may well be that in the final accounting we shall find that, aside from any other consideration, it would have been more prudent to do some bailing out. This war seems bound to make the United States all-powerful. We now have most of the world's gold, we are rapidly taking over British assets, and we look like collecting the very keys to world power. Yet the more powerful we get, the more we shall need customers. Mr. Mellon once said (and the times gave it proof) that a prosperous Europe was worth more to the United States in dollars and cents than the repayment of all the war loans put together. For wealth consists of exchange. And the more we take from now on, the more we shall have to lend or give in putting Europe back on its feet. Moreover, we shall be faced after the war, if the British capital stake keeps on diminishing, with a Britain which will be bound to restrict its purchases very heavily.

Safety In The Streets

One contribution the Board of Commissioners can make to safety on Washington's streets is to give Inspector Arthur E. Miller a permanent assignment as head of the Traffic Bureau. Since the retirement of Inspector W. E. Holmes, Inspector Miller has been doing good work as acting chief of the Traffic Bureau, but no law-enforcement officer can be expected to do his best work under a temporary assignment. By any reasonable test that can be applied Inspector Miller appears to be the right man for this difficult job. He is a police officer of extensive practical experience and more particularly he is an expert in traffic management and the enforcement of traffic laws. He was graduated with a distinguished record from Lieut. Kreml's traffic school at Northwestern University and won a scholarship from that institution. Since returning to Washington he has demonstrated the value of a scientific approach to the traffic safety problem. Without further delay the Commissioners ought to clear the way for him to put his full program into effect as permanent head of the Traffic Bureau.

Anniversary

We are indebted to Comrade George Dimitrov, general secretary of the Third International, for reminding us, in a half-page article in the Daily Worker, that today will be the seventieth anniversary of that brief and curious chapter in nineteenth century European history, the Paris Commune. Many years ago Mr. Hilaire Belloc observed that he was waiting for someone to explain to him what the Paris Commune was all about. He seemed sure that the communards themselves could not have told him. However, Karl Marx, an early historian of the Commune, undoubtedly regarded it as an event of great importance in working-class history, and nearly a half century later Lenin solemnly declared that the communards were the true political ancestors of the Bolsheviks. Surely the prophets of a religion ought to recognize orthodoxy when they see it.

Still, one may be pardoned for suspecting that only the virtue of being safely dead and buried these many years really saves the communards of 1871 from denunciation by their political children. In all probability they would today be dubbed Trotskyist wreckers or even imperialist warmongers. After all, most of the communards claimed to have been among those who in 1870 wanted to defend starving Paris to the death against the Germans, as they actually did defend the capital in 1871 against the French soldiers of MacMahon and Thiers. Even Comrade Dimitrov regretfully accuses the communards of serious deviations from party principles. For example, they "exhibited an excessive magnanimity toward their class enemies." This means apparently that instead of shooting all their hostages out of hand, they sought for a time to exchange them for Citoyen Blanqui, who had been taken prisoner by Thiers. Again, the communards wasted time on such bourgeois-democratic rigmarole as elections and, worst of all, they either forgot or neglected to seize the National Bank!

Legends of the two months' regime of the Paris Commune—of the street corner executions, the deeds of petroleurs and petroleuses, the hunger, the desecration of the churches, the secret proscriptions, the murder of the 69 hostages, including Archbishop Darboy—used to curl the hair of our more prosperous grandfathers and even, in times of labor unrest, give them an occasional sleepless night. Old-time Socialists on their part vented their spleen on the anti-communards. They were never done denouncing the ferocity of Thiers and the wholesale executions of communard prisoners during and following the retaking of the city by MacMahon's troops. But to a generation whose experience includes such things as the kulak liquidations, the Nazi pogroms, the bombardments in Ethiopia, China and Spain, the pacification of Poland, and the destruction of Rotterdam, to a generation whose favorite authors include Valtin and Hemingway, the doings of both the "bloodthirsty communards" and the "monsters of Versailles" seem half-hearted and tame—almost squeamish, in fact.

WHEELING WINGS

In after years
When you have gone your duty-bordered path,
And I, in helpless wrath
Have cursed your stolid heart, prayed lightning strike it;
Have dried these weary tears
And learned to live alone—but not to like it—
Wheeling wings
Against a mottled, gray, unfriendly winter sky
Will bring this moment back. The grief it brings,
Who wants again? Not I!

These restive birds
Careening, whirling, swerving finally in perfect line
Need pass no foolish words
About direction—in their hearts the prophecy of weather;
Sense of North and South; instinct of flesh and feather
Toward some thorny bough, where they will sing;
Where even now, the fine
Green leaves and fragile blossoms lie
Within the shallow womb of bud and branch . . . till spring.

These swift, untroubled creatures know
Where they must go—
But oh, my heart . . . not I!

Letters To The Editor

Of Freedom

Human events are chronicled, as time rolls on. Of such is history made. Never before have such ruthless events hurled Christian civilization out of its earthly orbit, leaving bruised of heart and bleeding of body by the millions across the length and breadth of the world. All the evil of all the forces of evil known to man crushes with juggernaut cruelty the aged, the helpless, the young, and even the unborn.

Why? Brutal force, hatred, lust for power, nurtured by the fiendish mentality that knows not truth of right, nor right of freedom, which is the heritage of all individuals, a right in no wise bestowed by man, and should in no wise be denied or destroyed by man. Yet brutal force, in the transient power of might, stalks forth and swings the lash of servitude upon the unprotected masses, thinking and seeking thereby to control and dictate, asserting no power so great as force, even putting the state before the human right.

What is frustating the powers of "Right over Might?" Is mankind to go on in the world from one generation to another, always remembering past wrongs? Seeking, with insatiable hate, ever to retaliate?

There could be a better, safer Christian goal, like a rainbow encircling the entire world, envisioned and built, to be shared by every human being. The tools required? Just an understanding of the other man's need; until like the sparkling water from a never ending mountain spring, the good and the best in us could be released to healthy benefit for all classes, types, races of whatever color of which the human race is composed.

Before it is too late for our generation to begin, let us have the honor and forthright courage to stand up like real men whether on the rostrum, or in the church. In our educational centers, wherever authority is exercised, let us express the power and strength of sincere manly thought and constructive action, which tells the world, Yes! I am my brother's keeper. And while there is yet time, stoop and pick up the fallen torch bequeathed from fallen hands, on the battle fields where the heroes died 23 years ago.

The torch from Flanders fields, remembering with renewed and continued reverence, the noble poem by Lieut. Col. John McCabe, "In Flanders Fields."

He died in France, in the last World War, January 28, 1918, being a member of the First Canadian contingent, after four years service on the Western Front, giving his life with millions more brave men, who died that freedom might not perish from the earth.

"Our Rotten Boroughs"

I cannot praise you too highly for your editorial entitled "Our Rotten Boroughs" in The Post of March 15 I hope other influential newspapers in this country will soon begin to see this issue as clearly as you do. This is one of the fundamental issues of our republic, our representative democracy. There is, for instance, only one State in the Union where one can in all complete honesty say that this problem does not exist and that is New Hampshire, where it is impossible for a bill to pass either House of the Legislature without representing a majority of the people.

Anyone who has ever "lobbied" for this idea will see how pusillanimous many of our so-called free and democratic legislators actually are. They are for the most of them scared to fight on account of rural retaliation. I have seen men bought off by ambitious candidates for Governor, etc., in order to play this issue down to gain rural votes. The abolition of disproportionate representation and gerrymandering calls for real statesmanship and great courage. Every moment our legislators delay to permit a just and proper representation in their legislative assemblies will just give some potential American fuehrer that much more time to belittle democracy with the people. I, for my part, hope that the leaders of the Republican Party will use this issue and that of foreign policy to get back to power. These are two issues which could easily gain public support if properly handled. This would give them much needed friends in the cities and many more friends on the farms. But I fear that the Republican Party hasn't bitten the dust enough really to want to wax fundamental.

But congratulations, Post, for seeing the light. Progress is always an uphill fight. We must never give up. Some day I feel that we Americans will have to grapple vith these issues and force our democracy to be a democracy.

Emotion And War

There is a strong tendency for those who do not understand the underlying causes of war to go off on a tangent, to resort to high-flown theories and emotional tirades in an attempt to justify war. To the religious fanatics, war is the will of God. This theory discredits human intelligence. To the munitions-makers, war means profits. To the sentimentalists, war, or the prospect of war, means they have a chance to become emotional in a foolish and unconstructive manner. They weep copious tears for the afflicted of other countries but are blind to the economic problems existing in their own backyard.

A letter-writer says we must fight "for that constellation of individual sparks which has been America." Such language is obscure, confused and hazy and has no real meaning. It is like a poem, best understood and appreciated only by the poet. He says further: "the flames have been dimmed by the paternalism of work-relief, by the contumely and restrictions heaped upon those who have been successful in competition." As I see it, all the insults and restrictions fall on the working people in the form of tear gas bombs, machine guns, stool pigeons, thugs and strikebreakers on which the employer spends more money to protect his interests than it would cost to meet his employes' demands. The working man must, therefore, take measures to protect his interests, namely, the right to earn a decent living wage and to work reasonable hours, in order that he will be able to buy back what he helps to produce. So far his own security and protection, unassisted by thugs, spies or clubs, the intelligent worker belongs to a union. As a member of a union, I cannot consider myself a member of the "incompetent and spiritless herd" of which the letter-writer speaks. Organized as we are, all working toward the same goal, we can never be incompetent or spiritless. Our war will always be a constructive one. Our best defense lies in home defense. We cannot afford, and neither can Congress, a billions-for-defense-but-not-one-cent-to-raise-the-American-standard-of-living program. There is not a working man living who will approach the sacrifices of war with "humility and penitence." Such an attitude belongs only to the emotionally unbalanced. If we must bemoan pauperism and despair, let us bemoan it, and not only bemoan, but do something about it, in our own country and not in England, Germany or Italy. The fate of all working people in all countries is the same; what we do for workers in this country we will be doing for workers of all other countries.

Bulgaria Minister's Reply On Bombing

In your editorial comment of March 13 on the regrettable bomb explosion in Pera Palace, Istanbul, victims of which were some members of the departed British diplomatic mission from Bulgaria, and which the Bulgarian government was first to deplore, you state in conclusion that the "plot was successful enough to suggest gross neglect on the part of the Bulgarian authorities."

Without questioning in the slightest your right to draw any conclusions, I consider that, in the light of available information, the above judgment is at least hasty and unwarranted by facts. But once you have found it opportune to make the above comment, which reflects unfavorably upon the Bulgarian authorities, in all fairness, publication should have been given in your columns to the statement made by the said authorities with reference to the bomb explosion, which was reported the same day in a dispatch of the Associated Press from Sofia. As this dispatch has failed to appear in your yesterday and today's issues, which I am convinced is due to omission, I deem it necessary to recall that the Bulgarian authorities who took all the required precautions, disclaim any responsibility because the British luggage was in "charge of British officials from the time they left their Sofia Legation until they reached the Turkish border."

At the same time and in the same dispatch it is also mentioned that the United States Minister to Bulgaria, Mr. G. W. Earle, who accompanied the British to the border, "expressed satisfaction with the good order in which the departure was executed." D. A. NAOUMOFF,

Bolus For Bombers

The papers are now talking about that invention of Dr. Robert Wood in the other war—to fill a shell with coiled wire to tangle up the propellers of the German bombers.

In the new novel, "Off the Ground" Robert Ettrick made a great improvement on the original idea. The wire is shorter and stronger and has steel balls on each end like a "bolus" used by the South American cowboys (Doug Fairbanks used to play with bolus ropes).

The wire is in a paper carton with a ball at each end. A light charge tears off the carton and the bolus comes into action, due to the detonator being set on opposite sides of the balls to give it a rotary motion. The bolus is dropped in front of a bomber, and the "bolus effect" is fatal to propellers. It is sure to foul something, as Doug Fairbanks showed so realistically.

The Post Impressionist

Point Of View

The young man with the fat brown Manila envelope under his arm leaned thoughtfully against the window-ledge facing the elevator shaft, watching the big cage move slowly into view from the floor above. As more and more of it became visible, it began to be plain that the conveyance was quite full. Through the steel grillwork he could see the first row of passengers standing motionless and apathetic. Their faces were quite expressionless; only their eyes, which met his solemnly as they came upon the same level, gave any evidence of life. As the car continued its unhurried descent, the operator's glance clung to his for a moment; then, almost soundlessly, the elevator and its occupants sank out of sight.

The man with the envelope sighed and turned to rest his elbow on the ledge. That was twice, he reflected, that the conveyance, in spite of its apparent slowness, had made the trip up and down within 5 minutes. Twice up and twice down. At that rate the operator would go over the same route 48 times an hour—almost 400 times in an eight-hour day. In a month——

The man with the envelope sighed again. Down below in the shaded alley patches of dirty snow still lingered, hard-packed under the parked automobiles, but the breeze that blew in through the open window was almost balmy. It was one of those mild and springlike afternoons that come, sometimes, toward the end of a Washington winter to disarm those who cavil at the eccentricities of the local barometer. Among the crowds upon the pavements more than one hardy male strode along without a topcoat, and occasionally one saw, pedaling in and out of the line of passing autos with languid daring, a messenger boy stripped to his shirtsleeves.

Now and then the man at the window could hear, borne on the fitful breeze, the low throb of the motors of the big silver blimp circling slowly overhead in a sky the color of dull aluminum; it looked, he decided, like a fat, sleepy carp cruising at the bottom of a motionless pool. While he watched, a flock of pigeons swooped down as if to settle on the projecting ledge of one of the nearby buildings, then, startled at some sound or movement imperceptible to the watcher, wheeled in perfect unison and flapped off in the direction of the river. On a roof not far away two men were doing something with ropes and ladders in the lee of a big electric sign. Off to the left, through a gap in the line of tall office buildings, he could glimpse the shining dome of the Capitol like the crown of a great white pith-helmet above the rooftops.

He was roused from his meditations by an almost inaudible movement behind him and turned in time to see the doors of the elevator roll smoothly back with the soft click of well-oiled steel.

In the rather dim light from the bulb in the roof of the car the naked scalp of the old gentleman who got on at the eighth floor shone like polished wax; above it the man with the envelope could see, bracketed to the wall, a dusty vase with three pink crepe-paper roses, a calendar advertising a real estate firm. As they passed the sixth floor, a buzzer sounded and one of the tiny lights in the double row in the panel in front of the operator glowed briefly. The operator, a thick-waisted young man whose uniform coat fit him, in places, with a more than military snugness, seemed to be ignoring it almost pointedly, but at the next floor he brought the car to a stop. A girl with a pink blouse handed him a sheaf of letters with a quick smile when he rolled back the door. He took them silently, laid them on the three-legged stool behind him. In another moment he was leveling off at the street floor as carefully as a harbor pilot warping an ocean liner into her pier.

Outside on the steps afterward the man with the brown envelope noticed idly that the elevator man, after posting the letters in the box, at the corner, was lingering in the doorway for a few quick puffs at a cigarette. There is an etiquette governing the deportment of the American male placed in casual and temporary juxtaposition to another of the same genus. For all our Whitmanesque tradition of free-and-easy democratic friendliness we are at bottom shy race. The average urbanite, on first contact, is about as chatty as one of Fenimore Cooper's Iroquois. The man with the envelope suffered from the same inhibitions as most of his fellow-countrymen.

He maintained, for the conventional period, that air of bored self-absorption which propriety demands. Turning over in his mind the strictly limited set of platitudes which usage permits one to offer as a conversational gambit under the circumstances, he lighted a cigarette. It might be illuminating if statistics could be published on the quantity of tobacco consumed in an effort to screen the hesitations of the socially inadequate. Just then, providentially or otherwise, his attention was drawn overhead by a familiar drone of engines. He gazed upward for a moment with an appearance of critical interest.

"Nice job that fellow's got, a day like today," he observed offhandedly.

The elevator man followed the other's gaze aloft toward the big blimp passing again on its endless circle. He appeared to be weighing the remark with judicial care.

"Guess so," he agreed, at last rather grudgingly, flipping his cigarette end in a long arc to the gutter. "But it must get mighty tiresome, just floating around like that all the time."

The man with the brown manila envelope nodded slowly. He looked very thoughtful as he continued down the steps toward the street.

Today And Tomorrow

The Axis, The Azores, And America

LIPPMANN

DURING THE PAST few days both the German and the Italian news propaganda has been referring to the Azores, the Portuguese islands which are so situated strategically in the Atlantic Ocean that they have for centuries dominated the routes from Europe to the Americas.

Three hundred years ago they were the advance base of the Spaniards for their operations in the West Indies. They are today the principal stepping stone for commercial aviation between Europe and North America. They are as near to Newfoundland as they are to Gibraltar. Ships traveling from North and South America to the Mediterranean, to the French Atlantic ports and even to English ports, must pass very near to the Azores. These islands are for all practical purposes very nearly in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, and because the Atlantic is much smaller than the Pacific, it is a conservative statement to say that the control of the Azores is at least as important to our defense and to our interests as a sea-faring nation as is the control of Hawaii.

THE AZORES are in fact the northern end of a chain of islands, some Spanish and some Portuguese, extending from the island of Corvo to the Cape Verde Islands. They control the approaches to this hemisphere. The last time, for example, that a European navy invaded the Western Hemisphere, the point of departure for the fleet was the Cape Verde Islands. It was only 43 years ago, within the memory of many of us, that Admiral Cevera and his Spanish fleet sailed from the Cape Verde Islands on April 29, 1898, touched at the French island of Martinique on May 11, called at the Dutch island of Curacao on May 15, and arrived at Santiago in the island of Cuba on May 19.

We have reason to know, therefore, that the islands of the Atlantic Ocean are of very great interest to the United States. For as Admiral Mahan, our greatest teacher of naval strategy, has said in his discussion of the "Lessons of the War with Spain," this country "cannot expect ever again to have an enemy so entirely inapt as Spain showed herself to be, yet even so, Cevera's division reached Santiago on the nineteenth of May, two days before our divisions appeared in the full force they could muster before Havana and Cienfuegos." Today, a hostile fleet operating from these islands in the direction of South America would have a shorter distance to travel than would an American fleet, operating from any base we possess, which set out to intercept them.

THE SUDDEN INTEREST of the Axis newspapers in these islands is bound, therefore, to be a matter of very great interest to the United States. In their comment they profess to believe that Great Britain is about to occupy the Azores, and in the past this kind of talk has meant invariably that they themselves were preparing an aggression. We cannot forget that Hitler said he had to have Czecho-Slovakia because Russia was about to attack Germany from Czecho-Slovakia, that he had to seize Norway because the British were about to seize Norway, that he had to invade Holland and Belgium because the Allies were about to invade them, that he had to have Rumania because there were British agents in Rumania, that he had to have Bulgaria in order to defend it from the British, and that Mussolini said he had to attack Greece because the British were going to take over Greece. On past performances there would, therefore, be a strong presumption that the Axis is planning to seize the Azores, or at the very least that it wishes to create a diversion by making the world think it has such a plan.

There is no doubt that the occupation of the Azores by the Nazis would be another and most important move in the encirclement and blockade of the British Isles. It would close all the approaches to Britain except only the very narrow northerly route and even that would be dangerously jeopardized. And while it is not easy to see just how Hitler would get to the Azores, it is well to remember, first, that no one foresaw how he was going to take Norway, and second, that the invasion of the undefended Azores would certainly be a less formidable undertaking than the invasion of England. The distance is greater but the defenses are nonexistent, and as part of some larger operation which engaged the British fleet in the Mediterranean and around the British Isles, the undertaking is quite within the scope of Hitler's strategical conceptions. It will be advisable, therefore, to take seriously the advance notice of the Axis press. Such notices have some purpose. They are not irresponsible chatter, and they must not be disregarded. The seizure of the Azores, if it could be effected, would be one of the great moves of the war, a deadly danger to Britain, a dangerous challenge to the United States, and a paralyzing stroke against the French Empire and against all of South America.

THERE HAS BEEN a prolonged debate among geographers, like that of the schoolmen as to how many angels can dance on the point of a needle, whether the Azores are within the "Western Hemisphere." For some reason which no one can account for oh any practical ground, the Western Hemisphere is supposed to begin at the imaginary line of 20 degrees west longitude. Yet though this places the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands in the Western Hemisphere, it is usually said that they are, nevertheless, not within the Western Hemisphere.

Why not? Because economically and politically and historically they are bound up with Europe, and, therefore, they have never been held to fall within the scope of the political veto laid down in the Monroe Doctrine. But strategically they are of the very greatest consequence to the Monroe Doctrine, since the uses of these islands as the advance base of a hostile navy and air force would make the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine almost impossible with the forces at our disposal.

THE QUESTION OF the American interest in the Azores has never been raised before because throughout American history they have belonged to Portugal, a friendly nation, and the ancient ally of Great Britain. But the Azores belonging nominally to a Portugal that had been overrun by Hitler and incorporated into his new order, the Azores as part of the totalitarian empire with Britain defeated, would be a greater threat to the United States than the conquest of Hawaii by the Japanese. For Japan can never invade the Western Hemisphere, having no Fifth Column support within this hemisphere. But the European Axis has such support, and with the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands as an operating base, a well-nigh mortal blow would have been struck at the defenses of the Western Hemisphere.

It should, therefore, be made plain at once from this country that the Azores are as much an American vital interest as Martinique or Bermuda or Newfoundland, and no measure should be neglected which will make the seizure of the Azores by the Axis powers an impossibility.

Fair Enough

Mrs. Spelvin On The Home

INVITED to elaborate her previous observations on the stale of the Nation, Mrs. George Spelvin, American, appeared before the committee in Washington and spoke as follows:

(By Senator Nilly, Ind., Ind.—Mrs. Spelvin, I believe you take the view that in your view the trouble that causes so much of our trouble is because the American home used to be the foundation stone of our sacred heritage, whereas you sometimes now find the cause of our trouble right there when the parents fail to——

A. (By Mrs. Spelvin)—Well, Senator, that all depends, but we have been married 25 years, and after you have a couple of children sometimes you are tired, so you lose your temper, but if you are going to run down to some lawyer and get a divorce every time somebody gets sore, well, pretty soon we wouldn't have any homes at all, and then there is alimony, and Mr. Spelvin is no Clark Gable, but I don't believe in all these broadminded ideas and I don't see how anybody can get a friendly divorce, because if I ever get a divorce I will be good and sore, and I will make it plenty hot for him——

Q. (By Senator Nilly)—Do you mean——

A. (By Mrs. Spelvin)—Well, if you put yourself in my place, why after all these years, and I know I am not any society beauty around the expensive cafes like some of these divorcees always runnning out to Reno like a 50-trip ticket, so naturally it is a case of something different when it comes to breaking up a home if you aren't good looking and the children are grown up——

Q. (By Senator Nilly)—So it is your view that——

A. (By Mrs. Spelvin)—Well, you can't lay down any fast and loose rules, but if a woman is smart she certainly won't stand for any funny business, so the first thing you know some pretty little thrip with a nice figure but not a grain of sense, and all she wants is a good time and a fur coat, and it makes no difference what happens to the wife if some silly man will show her a good time, and you just have to realize that men are fools, especially around 50 years old, and a wife doesn't have to act like a detective, although otherwise the first thing you know they don't ever come home anymore with one excuse after another, so in my opinion——

Q. (By Senator Nilly)—Then we are to understand that——

A. (By Mrs. Spelvin)—Well, you simply have to realize that people are not alike, but if you are going to get a divorce every time somebody calls you a damn fool and things like "For God's sake shut your bazoo and go to sleep," or the husband gets tight and tells the same old story you have heard for 20 years over and over, why, nevertheless, the home is where you raise your children, and what kind of children will they be if they know the mother and father are living with somebody else, and nowadays some parents get married over and over until it is just like a lot of chickens on a farm, and nobody knows who anybody else is any more——

Q. (By Senator Nilly)—But in extreme cases do you think—

A. (By Mrs. Spelvin)—In a way, yes, but then again if you know your man it seems to me when you get married, well, your single days are over, and if the wife can stay home day and night and sometimes the wife likes to see a movie and how does she know where he is going when he stays out late, but just because you have a little fight it is foolish to think you have to get a divorce at the drop of your hat, and I wish you would just tell me how people know they are in love before they get divorced, if they are minding their own business while they are still married to their regular wife or husband before they even get divorced, and if that is what you mean, why the answer is positively no.

(By Senator Nilly)—On behalf of the committee, I thank you, Mrs. Spelvin.

Baering Down On the News

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer

Exactly 16,000,000 taxpayers sent in $1,000,000,000 to the dot after less exemptions had broadened the base like hoss-back riding.

But when the official collector said people paid with a smile on their faces I think he is exaggerating an involuntary muscular contortion.

What the collector thought was a smile was the well-known risus sardonicus or facial spasm made immortal by the good old southern cooking of the Borgias.

A first instalment of $1,000,000,000 indicates that turn-about is fair play and every so often the jack-pot hits you.

But don't believe that anybody paid with a smile or that the popular price has been reached in taxation.

I do believe that the 16,000,000 patriotic subscribers laid their coconuts on the line like well-buttered Spartans.

Churchill Looks To Us

SHORTLY BEFORE leaving London, an astute American official who has just returned to this country had a long farewell talk with Winston Churchill. Many aspects of the war situation, and particularly the aid expected from the United States by Britain, were frankly discussed between the two men, who have been on a footing of friendly intimacy for some years. The American's brief but succinct account of this talk is of particular interest as showing the reliance now placed on us by the British.

ALSOP

According to the American, Churchill was sober, but hopeful. He did not seek to minimize for an instant the dangers of the months immediately ahead. Grave air raid damage, grave shipping losses, grave tests of Britain's courage and military strength—to all these he looked forward with open eyes. Like our own experts, he was strongly inclined to believe that the danger to Britain's life-lines would prove the most serious, but beyond this avoided exact predictions.

Nor did he seek to exaggerate the aid the United States can extend to Britain during the oncoming crises. He showed he was under no delusions as to its practical limitations, yet firmly proclaimed his faith that Britain's resistance could be fully maintained through the spring and summer, and into the autumn and next winter.

Then, however, when the immediate crisis would be over, he looked to this country to play its great role. Then, he said, Britain would need supplies of all sorts, not in driblets but in vast quantities, to stanch her summer-given wounds. And by then, he went on, the United States' defense program should be really under way, and we ought to be functioning as a true arsenal of democracy.

SUCH, unquestionably, is the British strategy—to get through the spring and summer with such quick help as we can give, and then to stage a comeback when we are ready with larger aid. Although no one doubts that the months ahead will be very terrible, our military and naval experts are generally inclined to agree that this strategy is feasible. Granting that the worst danger is to Britain's shipping, the attacks on British shipping cannot prove knock-out blows, if the authorities here are correct that Britain now has reserves of both food and munitions sufficient to last until autumn. The British Food Ministry, for example, is said to be so confident of its plentiful stores that some increase in the crucial fat ration is being considered.

But for Americans, the really striking aspect of the British strategy is the heavy reliance placed on us. Can this country do the job? That is the big question.

After months of rather gloomy reports about the defense program, it is pleasant to be able to say that the signs are finally turning favorable. First, the program laid out last summer, though inadequate, is at least coming into quantity production well ahead of schedule. Second, the scope of planning and preparation has been properly expanded, in the consolidated schedule of British and American needs worked out by the Cabinet War Committee, which Harry L. Hopkins serves as secretary. With this schedule to keep to, the men in charge of the defense effort know where they are going and how soon they must get there. And third, in the Office of Production Management and at the Army and Navy Departments, a proper sense of urgency has appeared, and simultaneously, perhaps as a result of this, the production organization at last seems to be functioning smoothly and energetically.

The third and main point cannot be precisely documented, yet no one who talks to the men in charge of defense production can fail to notice the sharp change of atmosphere. Only a few weeks ago, discouragement and a certain feeling of aimlessness were frankly and almost universally admitted to. Now, as one man puts it, "the stuff is starting to come off the lines, and the thing is really jelling."

THERE ARE ALSO minor bits of factual supporting evidence. For instance, the Army Air Corps plan for further expanding air production capacity has already run the gantlet in the Army, is now being mulled over by the OPM, and is slated for prompt approval. When the Air Corps began to push its plan, in mid-February, there were but 45 days before the deadline on April 1, the last moment when the expansions could be ordered in time to be ready in 1942. Then it seemed as though the deadline could never be met. Now the likelihood is that the deadline will be handsomely beaten.

KINTNER

Of course, nothing is perfect, and there are still serious defects in defense planning. Probably the worst is the failure to include in the requests for appropriations for the Army, Navy and the British, sufficient sums to pay for such plant expansion as the Army Air Corps contemplates in the air industry. If plant expansion is planned and paid for in advance, production increases far more rapidly than if expansion is allowed merely to depend on the placement of large orders for finished goods. Much more than the 10 per cent now allowed for it will have to be spent on direct plant expansion if the $35,000,000,000 defense program is to be finished as soon as it should be. But correcting minor defects is always easy, so long as the realities of the main problem have been squarely faced.

Three Bills Ask Montgomery Changes Urged by Brookings

Three bills embodying recommendations from the Brookings Institution report on a survey of Montgomery County governmental functions were introduced yesterday by Delegate Charles M. Jones in the Maryland House of Delegates at Annapolis, Md.

The bills would provide that the Montgomery County commissioners constitute the liquor control board for the county; provide a full-time county attorney at a $5,000 annual salary, and repeal a law creating the post of executive secretary to the president of the county commissioners.

The bills were the first introduced this session by Jones and apparently were inspired by the recommendations of the Brookings Institution printed Sunday in The Post.

Lateness Deplored

Meanwhile, James W. Gill, of Silver Spring, chairman of the county delegation, issued a statement deploring that the lateness of the report's issuance might preclude enacting into law at this session several recommendations which appeared to be agreeable to the county delegation.

Gill said: "It does appear that a number of suggestions made by the report as printed in The Post Sunday are on subjects to which the delegation already has given much thought and consideration, including the proposed public hearings on the budget and proposed reduction of counsel for the various governmental agencies.

"It is very probable that some of these will be enacted into law at this session. The report is a distinct step forward and is another indication that both citizens and county government, working hand in hand, will continue to maintain the best in county government."

He pointed out only five days remain for introduction of new measures, including yesterday.

People Also Concerned

Stanton C. Peelle, jr., another member of the delegation, also expressed his concern that the report had been published so late in the session if "legislation is needed to carry out any of the recommendations."

The liquor control board bill introduced by Jones provides for abolition of the present separate board. This move was recommended by the Brookings report and has been advocated for several years by the Montgomery County Civic Federation and other civic groups of the county.

The full-time attorney would receive $5,000 a year and have a secretary, appointed by him at a salary of not more than $1,800 a year, and would be appointed on a four-year term and be removable only for cause. He would replace part-time attorneys now functioning for the county commissioners, the liquor board, the board of education, the board of election supervisors, the county treasurer and possibly the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The latter commission is a bi-county board and probably would not be affected.

The law provides that the full-time attorney will advise "all other governmental agencies of the county" and "devote his personal attention exclusively to the duties of his office."

The post of executive secretary to the president of the board was held by Ralph H. Chase, of Chevy Chase, who now is deputy clerk to the county commissioners at Bethesda County Building.

A Cushion For Peace

Report On Resources

The text of President Roosevelt's message transmitting to Congress a report of the National Resources Planning Board follows:

National defense is more than a mobilization of a nation's armed strength. Equally must we focus public thought on the ideals and objectives of our national life. We must seek wider understanding of the possibilities for that future we prepare to defend.

Among those possibilities are the large use, the conservation and development of the Nation's resources. I have from time to time during the past eight years called to the attention of the Congress these possibilities; and during these years several laws have been enacted to promote the orderly development and prudent husbandry of our national resources, human as well as material.

The National Resources Planning Board has now completed its report, which I send you herewith, on "The Development of Resources and the Stabilization of Employment in the United States." This is the first of a series of such reports which each year I shall transmit to the Congress shortly after submission of the budget of the United States.

The budget contains the recommendations of the Chief Executive for the financial outlays to carry on a public works program during the next fiscal year. This report places these recommendations within the framework of a long-range policy of intelligent planning for the future. It contains a six-year program of public construction and a statement of related future policies and plans of the Federal Government.

Under the terms of reorganization plan No. 1, effective July 1, 1939, I have, by a series of executive orders, given to the National Resources Planning Board responsibility for correlating the six-year public works programs of those agencies which plan or undertake construction directly for the Federal Government and those which indirectly participate in construction by means of loans, grants or other financial aid. The board is also aiding cities and States to prepare similar programs or capital budgets so as to develop a full and coordinated program of national development.

The board can thus help to iron out conflicts among the plans of different agencies and to present for consideration by the Congress a program which expresses local, State, regional and national aspirations for a progressive development of our resources and for stabilization of employment.

This six-year program lists the budget estimates for the coming fiscal year and summarizes a developing program for the ensuing five years. If projects are to be ready at hand for rapid inauguration in times of need, the surveys and investigations, the engineering plans and specifications must be prepared in advance. Authorizations and financial arrangements must be already agreed upon.

The planning revolving fund, suggested in the board's report, would make available a shelf of useful projects without in any way committing the Government to the immediate construction of such works. Because of the current national emergency, projects not needed for defense have been temporarily deferred. As a result, we are now in the process of storing up a reservoir of non-defense public work which can be loosed when the pace of rearmament slackens.

The report of the board is divided into three parts:

Part I, the Federal program for national development—This is the report of the board and contains its findings and recommendations.

Part II, regional development plans—This section reproduces statements prepared through the ten regional offices of the board in cooperation with regional and State planning agencies and with representative citizens.

Part III, functional development policies—This part of the report is devoted to studies by the technical advisory committees of the board on national policies for the development of our land, water and energy resources.

To facilitate their use by the Congress, I recommend that all three parts of the report be printed, together with the illustrations and supporting tables.

Apartment House Leased for British Workers in D. C.

An apartment house at 1800 K Street Northwest has been leased by the British Purchasing Commission to house workers moved here from New York, it was announced yesterday.

Occupancy is not expected for at least another month, in order to give present residents of the apartment time to find new homes.

The commission would not confirm rumors that the building will house two new British missions appointed here—Sir Arthur Salter's special shipping mission and Robert H. Brand's food mission.

Leasing of the building was seen as part of the commission's plan to concentrate its offices in Washington.

The Path Ahead

By Mark Sullivan

The Direction Of American Opinion

PROTESTS RECEIVED by this column, and some arising within the column's conscience, charge that the column has overemphasized the significance of our enacting the lease-lend bill; that it is wrong to say the lease-lend bill means partnership by us in the war, and wrong to imply that the present step makes further steps probable. In short, that if we choose, we can stop with this step, and completely avoid becoming involved in any more direct or serious way in future developments of the war.

SULLIVAN

What we are talking about here is an evolution of American opinion—perhaps emotion would be a better word. American feeling for more than two years has been moving in the direction of taking more and more notice of the war, lately in the direction of taking sides in the war, of tolerance for possible participation in the war. If we go still farther it will be because American feeling wants to go farther. Having come a great distance, it is difficult to imagine that with this step we will dig in our heels and stop.

To realize how far we have come, look back to the month of January, 1939. In California a military plane on a test flight came to earth by accident. Newsmen hurrying to the scene found that an occupant of the plane was a French army officer. Quickly it turned out that the French government was buying a small number of planes from American manfacturers. The news was flashed to Washington. There, alert newsmen discovered that the transaction had been approved and facilitated by President Roosevelt.

At once arose uproar, some of it in Congress. It was said that we were endangering our neutrality—in a possible war that had not yet begun, which only a comparatively few believed would ever come, and which actually did not begin until eight months later.

THE OUTCRY so disturbed Mr. Roosevelt that he had a manner of apologizing. At a press conference he said—I quote my own dispatch printed January 27, 1939: "He [Mr. Roosevelt] said the Cabinet had discussed it and taken the responsibility. He put the justification on the grounds that it gives employment to American workers, increases our foreign trade, and builds up our factory facilities for making airplanes for our own defense if and when we need them."

A little later Congressmen, disquieted by the incident, went to the White House for explanation. The conference was supposed to be confidential. But reports leaking out described Mr. Roosevelt as saying that the Rhine is America's first line of defense. Again arose commotion, so excited that Mr. Roosevelt, taking account of the public mood, went the length of denying he had said it. To those responsible for the report, he applied the short and ugly word.

That is the picture of American feeling a little over two years ago. It was a stern determination to remain aloof from war, an almost hysterical suspicion against involvement in even the possibility of a war that had not yet begun, a frantic clinging to isolation.

THE WAR CAME in September, 1939. President Roosevelt called a special session of Congress to enact legislation which should ensure our neutrality. In November, 1939, Congress passed a neutrality act which went on the assumption that in order to avoid getting involved in the war, we would tie our own hands. We voluntarily abandoned rights that we had as a neutral under long established international law. We drastically restricted sales of war material by American manufacturers. They could sell only for cash, and only if the purchasing nation carried the war materials away from the United States in its own ships—the so-called "cash-and-carry" plan for preserving neutrality. We made it a crime, punishable by imprisonment, for any American ship to go into the war zone. Assuming that the lending of money to the Allies in the Great War had been a cause of our entering, we now made it a crime for any American to loan money or extend credit to a nation at war. (That assumption was incorrect. It was not the bankers who took us into the Great War; it was our own emotions—just as it is our own emotions that are now taking us toward this war.)

Seventeen months passed. By March of the present year, we found ourselves in the mood which enacted the lend-lease bill. Nothing and no one compelled us to enact it. There was adequate debate. There was stirring leadership against it—over and over Senator Wheeler and others told us that if we passed the bill we would later find ourselves more closely involved in the war. But America wanted the bill. Every section of the country supported it in Congress. In all the South there was only one Senate vote against it.

IT IS A FAR cry from making it a crime to sell Britain war materials on credit, to enacting what amounts to a credit of $7,000,000,000 for her. In 17 months we have progressed that far. It is difficult to suppose that the progression will not continue to carry us further.

Shipping Losses Greatly Exceed World War Rate, Lloyd's Says

By the Associated Press

London, March 17.—The world's authority on shipping, Lloyds of London, declared today that British, Allied and neutral maritime losses in the first 18 months of the war were one-seventh greater than those of the first 30 months of the World War.

Confirming with figures previous reports that Germany's destruction of shipping was running ahead of the World War pace, Lloyds and the Shipping Gazette said British, Allied and merchant tonnage sent to the bottom was 4,962,257, over 600,000 tons greater than in the first 2½ years of the World War.

On the other side, German, Italian and Axis-controled shipping losses were placed at 2,028,140 tons.

The losses represented to the British, her Allies and neutrals 1,245 ships; to the Axis, 422 ships.

(The listed British losses compared with 3,341 ships of 4,316,000 tons in the 30 months of the World War up to February 1, 1917, just before the disastrous German submarine campaign of 1917 which nearly brought England to her knees.

(On March 13, the authorized German commentary Dienst Aus Deutschland declared that German forces had sunk more than 9,000,000 tons of British and Allied or neutral shipping. This figure would be over 1,000,000 greater than the total Allied losses of the World War.

(At the start of the war, Lloyds listed total British tonnage at 21,001,925, representing 8,977 steamships and motorships of 100 gross tons or more.

(In addition, the British obtained an undisclosed number of vessels of total tonnage of 12,320,685 under the flags of Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Holland and France at the start of the war.)

The British themselves, the Lloyds breakdown showed, have lost 757 ships of 3,171,273 tons in the present conflict; Allied nations, 193 ships, totaling 875,202 tons, and neutrals, 295 ships of 915,782 tons.

Included for the first time were losses in the Dunkerque retreat, when the British lost 72 ships totaling 280,556 tons and her Allies 39 ships totaling 169,348 tons. These did not include numerous small pleasure and fishing craft generally credited with heroic roles in that disaster.

German losses known by name, Lloyds said, were 60 ships of 268,542 tons captured and 77 ships of 420,947 tons sunk since the outbreak of the war. In addition, Lloyds estimated 129 German ships of 645,000 tons have been sunk.

Italian losses since Italy's entry into the war June 10, 1940, were placed at 38 ships of 179,619 tons captured and 21 ships of 137,932 tons sunk. An additional toll of 63 ships totaling 315,000 tons, with names and exact tonnages unknown, were estimated.

Of formerly neutral ships which later came under German control, Lloyds said 34, totaling 61,000 tons, had been lost.

Curtain of Fire Hampers Nazi Night Raiders

By George Lait
International News Service Staff Writer

London, March 17.—Britain's newest weapon in combatting German night bombers is already producing notable results, this writer can report tonight after a first-hand glimpse into what the air ministry has been calling "other devices" in its recent communiques.

Although stringent military censorship prohibits revelation of the details of these "other devices," I was the first correspondent permitted to accompany a mobile attack gun battery and to witness and describe the new British "switch on, switch off" barrage in action.

Up to March 15 this type of barrage shot down 17 of Hitler's night bombers in a relatively short time.

I went riding with a young captain in a huge American-built truck, on the back of which was mounted a formidable gun. As the captain was whamming away at planes at a range of 20,000 feet, I was initiated into the details of the new antiaircraft attack tactics.

The mobile guns, as well as the stationary batteries, coordinate in sending up the "switch on, switch off" barrage. Each gun has its job to do, all of which is plotted out and charted by the divisional command beforehand. Every possible contingency is foreseen.

With the coming of darkness, the stationary batteries stand at what is called "ready," while the mobile guns scurry to their appointed posts.

Then, after the siren moans—well, here's what happened to me last night:

Mounted on the seat of the big truck beside the driver, I rode through the dusk to a London suburb which had been taking it on the chin almost nightly since September. The driver sped along without instructions—he's been doing the same nightly now for a month. I tried to engage him in conversation. He said:

"I'm only the jockey on this barge. The skipper's the only one who can tell you anything."

I clambered to the gun platform where the captain was peacefully smoking a pipe. He was likewise uncommunicative.

Solid Curtain of Fire

"We are going to throw up a solid curtain of fire from that cloud to about that one. (He pointed to another cloudbank to the west.)

"With the other guns, we'll cover an area of 5 or 6 squire miles and several thousand feet deep in the sky.

"Soon as the raider gets overhead we'll cut loose and, unless Jerry's got more rabbits' feet than a barrel of rabbits, we'll down him.

"After we've peppered this section, we'll switch to another section of the sky and do the same thing. And so on through the night.

"Sounds dull. Actually it is—dull and uninteresting, for everybody except for Mister Jerry upstairs.

"To him it's unmitigated hell because he doesn't know where and when it is coming—doesn't know at what height it's going to begin—doesn't know anything at all about it, except that he'd feel a lot more comfortable in some Berlin beer stube than winging around in the dark, expecting at any moment to have the seat of his new trousers burned off by four or five pounds of shrapnel.

"That's what makes the 'switch on, switch off' barrage so effective. It comes unexpectedly in a small area. The whole trick is in concentrating on that area and trapping anything within the given range.

"Where there is a single gun, the toughest job is trying to whang away at a raider that the gunners can't see. But this new kind of fire makes it Jerry's job to be where the barrage ain't when the firing begins.

"It's been most successful since we tried it out.

"I'll bet that shortly most Luftwaffe bomber pilots will get gray hair and lose weight from worry and that (Air Marshal) Goering's sleep will be disturbed by dreaming of myriads of antiaircraft guns banging medals off his chest."

At this point, headquarters interrupted the captain's discourse with notification that raiders were approaching.

The captain turned and mumbled instructions to his crew.

A second later our gun, as well as guns all around us, began barking in a deafening cacophony of thunder, hurling thousands of pounds of steel into the sky. The guns laid a huge fatal network of invisible, screaming chunks of shrapnel to trap any German raiders which might dare to approach the British capital from our side of the city.

We didn't get any raiders on this night—although half a dozen were downed by antiaircraft guns in other parts of the country.

'Iron Duke' Pays Visit to Warrenton And City Turns Out to Do Homage

Warrenton, Va., March 17.

School children and their parents in this peaceful Virginia city today paid their respects to a battle-scarred veteran of a new war.

The veteran was the fire-scorched, bomb-torn mobile tea kitchen, the Iron Duke, which rolled into town this morning about 10 o'clock after visiting Washington, Middleburg and The Plains.

Greeted by police and firemen, the Iron Duke stopped at the grade school, again at the high school and both times the students heard about the kitchen's war adventures from Mrs. F. Hugh Treherne-Thomas, former officer of the British Women's Voluntary Service, who is accompanying the Iron Duke on its 5,000-mile American trip.

Mrs. Treherne - Thomas was welcomed by Mayor Wallace N. Tiffany and Mrs. W. M. Black, local chairman of the British War Relief Society. Members of the American Legion in uniform, and members of the Town Council were among those who inspected the war relics in the tea kitchen.

MRS. TERHERNE-THOMAS talks to Amy Willis and Val Stieglitz, Warrenton school children, wearing souvenirs of the Battle of Britain

Nearly 350 persons paid for a lunch, almost a wartime menu, including cheese and meat sandwiches, hard boiled eggs, and tea, and served from the Iron Duke by Mrs. Cotton Smith and her committee of the local British War Relief Society.

The Iron Duke left Middleburg early yesterday after more than 1,000 persons had cheered its arrival there Sunday night. En route to Warrenton the truck made a stop at The Plains, and was viewed by hundreds of farmers and townsmen as the unusual implement of war relief passed through the countryside.

At The Plains, Mayor C. K. Moffet, Mrs. R. J. Vickers, the Rev. Howard Harper and J. W. Slaughter headed the group that greeted the Iron Duke.

Shortly before 2 p. m., the Iron Duke drove on out of Warrenton, for a brief stop at nearby Catlett, and then to Richmond, Va.

Berbera Falls, British Regain Somali Colony

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Egypt, March 17.—The recapture of Berbera, capital of British Somaliland, by imperial troops landed from the sea under the protection of the fleet's guns and supported by armored cars attached to the Royal Air Force was announced today by the British command.

The British thus went back into the Somaliland from the same coastal door through which a small force had evacuated it last summer, and the town's capture was declared to have returned practical control of the colony to the British.

Moreover, British informants said, it would permit speeding up supplies to a British column marching against Jijiga and Harar in Ethiopia and possibly open the way for new forces to join those boring into Italy's East African domain.

The landing at Berbera was ushered in by heavy air raids on Italian positions.

Then the air force armored cars, designed primarily to supplement air operations on land in special cases, were landed with the army and took part in storming the town.

The general air offensive included a particularly heavy attack on the Italian airport at Diredawa, in Ethiopia, and was designed to keep the skies free of Italian planes during the British landing at Berbera.

Almost simultaneous with the seizure of Berbera, the British announced capture of important heights about Cheren, mountain stronghold, where Italian resistance still is stalling the drive toward Asmara, Eritrean capital, and the Red Sea port of Asmara.

(In Rome, the Italian high command said Italians had beaten back a renewed British offensive against the town.)

Dr. Huntington 'Regrets' Spanish Group Resignations

Dr. Ellsworth Huntington, of the Yale University faculty, regretted here yesterday that the sponsors who recently resigned from the United American Spanish Aid Committee did not attend the organization's conference here last weekend.

Mrs. Roosevelt was among the sponsors who quit.

Dr. Huntington, a noted geographer and past president of the Association of American Geographers, said he became disturbed over the resignations of sponsors and attended the meeting "in order to see for myself what was happening and what kind of people were at work."

"I was most agreeably surprised," he said yesterday. "If the sponsors who resigned or who are still doubtful had been there, I am sure that they would have gained not only a new idea but a real inspiration."

He found, he said, "a group of ardent, earnest people whose main objective is obviously the relief of human suffering. There was no evidence of communistic leaning."

Two points have not been sufficiently emphasized in discussion of a rescue ship to bring Spanish Loyalists from French prison camps to Western Hemisphere nations, Dr. Huntington said.

"One is the historical fact that people who lead in reform movements almost always are of great value to the countries where they settle. Their descendants normally comprise an unusually high percentage of leaders in many lines. In America we have many examples, namely the Puritans, Huguenots and the Germans of 1848.

"Such people are troublesome when they are advocating their reforms, but they and their descendants are a great blessing to the countries where they settle. If the countries of Latin America admit Spanish leaders of this kind, they will greatly benefit themselves and the whole Western Hemisphere," he said.

Secondly, he said, many Latin-American countries "are keenly interested in the rescue ship. If we in the United States turn a cold shoulder to the ship, we are giving a slap in the face to the good neighbor policy and are going back on our declarations as to friendliness and cooperation," he said.

Meanwhile, the committee has not been successful in securing a ship.

PERHAPS SODA POP SHOULD BE "SWEET"

but never beer

Soda Pop is fine for those who enjoy sweet-tasting drinks. But anyone who enjoys truly fine beer knows that any trace of sweetness in beer takes away from the true flavor...leaves an after-taste that covers up the natural beer-i-ness.

REAL BEER drinkers who like their beer right say there's no beer like dry beer. And they order Gunther's because it hasn't the after-taste of "sweet" type beers.

Gunther's is brewed a special way. Extra hops, together with the finest of ingredients . . . aged for months on end to full maturity . . . combine to give Gunther's a lighter, drier flavor . . . free from the after-taste of "sweet" type beers.

Yes, this special way of making Gunther's DRY is costly. But the protective dry quality of Gunther's is making 1941 our most successful year since repeal.

Taste a glass of Gunther's today. See how much smoother it goes down . . . how much more satisfying it is . . . and what a wonderful thirst-quencher! That clean fresh taste, that absence of after-taste, is the unique quality that has made this special dry lager so famous among bartenders, international beer experts and regular everyday beer drinkers!

Supreme Court Upholds TVA Head's Ousting

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

The hope of Dr. Arthur E. Morgan to challenge successfully President Roosevelt's action ousting him from the chairmanship of the TVA was blasted yesterday by the Supreme Court.

The high tribunal refused to review a decision of the Federal Circuit Court at Cincinnati holding that the President had the power to remove Dr. Morgan, who was relieved of his post on March 22, 1938.

Following usual procedure, the Supreme Court did not explain its reason for turning down Dr. Morgan's appeal. It was merely noted that Justice Felix Frankfurter took no part in the decision. At the time of Dr. Morgan's dismissal, Justice Frankfurter was a professor at the Harvard Law School and a close adviser of the President.

Dr. Morgan, who was ousted for "contumacy," filed suit for back salary against the TVA and the other two directors, Harcourt A. Morgan and David Lilenthal, on the grounds that his dismissal was illegal and could be effected only by joint Congressional resolution.

However, the opinion of Judge C. C. Simons of the Sixth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on December 6, 1940—which the Supreme Court would not review—held that the TVA is an executive agency and subject to the President's power "to remove executive officers," which is "conferred upon him by the Constitution."

Appointed for a nine-year term in 1933, Dr. Morgan was dismissed after he had launched charges against his codirectors and then refused to participate fully in a Presidentially conducted hearing on the situation.

Dr. Morgan, who is president of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, had sued for $4,583.33 allegedly due in salary.

In a unanimous decision, the Supreme Court held that Jay C. Hormel, of Austin, Minn., was subject to a tax on the income of three trusts set up for his sons. The trusts each consisted of 2,000 shares of stock in George A. Hormel & Co. All the trust income for the years 1934 and 1935 was paid to Hormel's wife, as guardian.

However, the court ordered the Board of Tax Appeals to allow Hormel to offer new evidence. The board had held that the income was not taxable, but had been reversed by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, which had based its decision on a point of law that had not been presented to the board for consideration.

Admitting that "ordinarily an appellate court does not give consideration to issues not raised below," the Supreme Court held, nonetheless, that to follow this principle in this cause would "defeat rather than promote the ends of justice."

In the only other opinion of the day, the Supreme Court upheld the Michigan State Supreme Court in the case of Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Co. vs. Frank Stevens.

The Court also confirmed the report of an Arkansas-Tennessee boundary commission set up to settle a row caused by a shift in the Mississippi River channel. The report had already been agreed to by representatives of the two States.

The Court refused to review numerous decisions, including:

The Chicago Milk Wagon Drivers' Union case, in which it was held that picketing could be enjoined if it were "enmeshed" in "a context of violence."

Its decision upholding an Iowa use-tax requiring out-State corporations to collect the tax on mail order sales within Iowa.

A New York circuit court ruling affirming the conviction of John H. McGloon, of New York, an officer of McKeeson & Robbins, for making false statements in reports required by the 1934 Securities Exchange Act. McGloon was sentenced to a year and a day imprisonment and fined $5,000.

The conviction of J. Bush Crenshaw, former president of a bank in Newbern, Tenn., for making false entries. Crenshaw's sentence to five years' imprisonment and $2,000 fine was affirmed by the Sixth Circuit Court.

A decision of the First Circuit Court upsetting a 1938 revenue law of the Puerto Rican government, which would have imposed a higher tax on square matches cut from hardwood than on round matches punched out of soft wood. The law was intended to foster the local round-match industry.

Nearing the end of its sixth week in District Court, the antitrust trial now appears certain to go through the remainder of this month. There are 18 individual defendants and Dr. Woodward was only the second to testify. However, the defense has indicated that it will not call all the accused physicians to the stand.

To questioning by Leahy, Dr. Woodward categorically denied charges placed against him in the indictment relative to restraint of Group Health Association, a medical cooperative for Federal employes in Washington.

Whatever he said or did concerning G. H. A. was "restricted to confines of the law" and in pursuit of his professional duties as head of the A. M. A. bureau of legal medicine and legislation, the witness declared.

Under cross-examination by Grant W. Kelleher, of prosecution counsel, he was forced to give ground on several occasions. Dr. Woodward denied aiming to "forestall the growth" of G. H. A., only to be confronted with a letter he had written in which that phrase was used.

He denied making a telephone call to a Washington physician to discuss another doctor's suggestion that the District Medical Society might well go along with G. H. A. if it could do so and not lose face.

When Kelleher showed the witness an authenticated memorandum of the telephone conversation, Dr. Woodward said he still did not remember making the call, though the writer of the memorandum was himself.

"But if it's in there, it's correct," the witness declared.

He admitted knowing of the District Medical Society's "white list," which omitted the name of Group Health Association, and telling officials of the local society that he believed G. H. A. backers were doing "some tall bluffing."

The witness said his comprehensive report on G. H. A. was written for the information of the A. M. A. trustees, not as an article for publication in the association's weekly Journal. At that point Kelleher showed him a copy of a letter which Dr. Woodward wrote an agent in Washington, which stated:

"Confidentially, I am preparing an article for publication and would like to have latest details."

The letter was written on August 21, 1937. The Journal article appeared the following October 2.

Stressing the Journal article's significance to the jury, Kelleher compared Dr. Woodward's report to the trustees with its presentation in the weekly scientific publication to show how it was "edited."

Where Dr. Woodward wrote that doctors associated with G. H. A. would be "certain to lose professional caste," the word "caste" was changed to "status."

Blue-penciled from his report when it was being prepared for publication in the Journal was his statement that G. H. A. ". . . would materially diminish the incomes of physicians in private practice in the District of Columbia and render it necessary for them to increase their charges or to sacrifice the practices they have built up and go elsewhere."

Under Kelleher's questioning, Dr. Woodward said he did not advise the local society not to discipline two of its members for joining the G. H. A. staff. He admitted expressing interest in the identity of the leader of the society's "fight" against G. H. A. and, on learning that the leader was a press agent and not a medical man, criticizing such a selection.

Yesterday's session of the lengthy trial opened with Justice James M. Proctor's exclusion of documentary evidence which the defense sought to introduce in support of its argument that the defendants believed G. H. A. to be illegally constituted.

Trim Figure May Be Attained With Low-Cost Equipment

Stretching Bar, Medicine Ball Are Suggested

By Ida Jean Kain

WITH A little inexpensive equipment you can make a game of finding better measurements. All you need for your home gym is a stretching bar, a pillow, a six-pound medicine ball and a skip rope.

You can buy a stretching bar that adjusts to any doorway. Or you can simply have a stout rod cut the width of the door, and secure it with sockets that will hold it permanently in place. To avoid the possibility of strain, have the bar within fairly easy reach when you stand on tiptoes, in the bare feet.

There are a number of simple stretching bar exercises which do superlative things for the figure. One of the easiest and best for the waistline is to grip the bar firmly with the hands and to push down with the heels until you are standing flat-footed. Hold for a second, relax, and repeat ten or fifteen times.

Another good waistline trimmer is to stand close to one side of the door, grasp the bar, push down with the heels, and, without moving hands or feet, pull the midriff away from the door. This sideward arc of the midsection acts directly on the waistline duff. You can vary the exercise by grasping the bar near the middle, holding legs together and swinging hips from side to side, like a pendulum.

Short Order Trim

These exercises not only trim the waist in short order but tend to flatten the stomach and firm the upper arms and bust. If you are not too much of a softie, you can include hip-slimming by swinging alternate legs back and forth from the hips as you stretch from the bar.

A pillow suspended from the rod makes a very good punching bag. For a workout of the muscles on the backs of the upper arms, have the pillow about chest level. To strengthen the pectoral muscles and lift the bust, have it slightly higher so that the thrust of the arms is upward.

One of the most popular and least expensive exercise gadgets is a skip rope. You couldn't ask for a better circulation jogger and it amounts to a beauty routine for legs that are thin and underdeveloped. Skip on the toes, twice on one foot, then twice on the other.

Ball Pays Dividends

For beautifying the arms, shoulders, bust aand throat, there's no better investment than a medicine ball. A six-pound ball seems to be about the right weight for most women. Toss the ball up in the air and catch it before it falls lower than the crown of the head. Keep tossing and catching until your arms begin to feel tired. Rest for a bit, then do this stretching and bending exercise: Stand with feet parallel but wide apart, hold the ball high overhead with both hands, swing down to one side and rest ball on floor outside the foot. Back to starting position and continue for five counts, alternating sides.

New Plastic Designs

Plastics, those chemical wonder children of this modern scitific age, are not to be considered as substitutes but as new materials, according to a pioneer designer of plastics. That is why she creates new original forms for products in plastic rather than merely copying old things.

Tossing a large medicine ball into the air and catching it at head level is one way to keep the figure thin and slim. Movie Star Susan Hayward (above) demonstrates the correct technique

Shoe Colors Go Latin

Colorful shoes this spring means colored shoes, and not just colored trimmings, piping or platforms. And speaking of color, the "fiesta" colors which the color artillerists are showing for spring are knockouts. They are Latin-American-inspired and consist of: Brazilian beige, Argentine navy, Trinidad tan, Lima lemon, Chili sauce, Bogata blue and Peruvian pink. These subtle and high style shades are perfectly matched in handbags, gloves, silks and rayons, woolens, hats and shoes.

Foyer Lighting Keynotes Home

Since the foyer or hall in a home gives the keynote to the decoration of the entire house it should be considered in connection with the type of lighting used. The light in the foyer should be of the same general character as the main fixtures used in the living room if the foyer adjoins the living room. When the foyer is large enough, portable lighting fixtures or floor lamps, or torches may also be used. If a stairway leads from the foyer to a second floor, the stairs too must be well lighted.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Wooed by Distinguished Older Man in Congregation, Church Deaconess Cannot Reach Whole-Hearted Decision to Marry Him; Asks Clarification of Doubts

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 38 years old and the parish deaconess of our church. For almost two years I have known and enjoyed the friendship of one of the outstanding men of our congregation. He is 51 years of age. He has asked me to marry him. And I cannot decide whether I should. I know persons of our age should know our own mind, but for almost two years the question has disturbed me. There are no vows in my vocation, so if I choose to marry, I may. But I sometimes wonder if I would be doing the right thing.

Because of my position, it has seemed necessary to keep our friendship out of the public eye, but some folks not connected with our church seem to take made it their business to take note of my personal affairs, and have falsely rumored that I am engaged to be married. This is somewhat embarrassing for me, but I have tried to ignore it.

I realize that I have developed certain "fixeties" as a result of my work, which might be hard to change, and I sometimes wonder if I could adjust to marriage. There is no doubt in the man's mind, but he has left the decision entirely to me. I have worked with so many cases of "broken homes" that I sometimes wonder if this experience causes me to waver. I long for his companionship, because my life has been, of necessity, very lonely;—and yet, I wonder if I would tire of him and rebel against the discipline which is an essential part of married life.

I don't want to give him up, but neither do I have the complete assurance, which he has, that we would be happy in marriage. My family strongly objects to my marrying and I know their attitude influences me. I don't want to enter marriage with these feelings of doubt; yet I do want his companionship, his attentions and the feeling of security his devotion gives me. When I am with him, I am perfectly at ease and nothing else seems to matter. But when I get back to my work, I am disturbed by these feelings of uncertainty.

It has always been hard for me to make decisions, but I have never before confronted so difficult a decision as this. I fear that which ever decision I make may be wrong. I would be satisfied to have things remain as they are, but I realize that cannot be. He has given me a ring, which I have never worn, however, as I felt I shouldn't until I had given my promise. Also, we have made a small deposit on some furniture,—and I still don't know my own mind.

If we should marry, it would be in May, but I can't feel as enthusiastic as I should. Why can't I work up any enthusiasm about buying clothes, furnishings, etc.? Something seems to be holding me back. Perhaps it's just my make-up; as nothing has ever excited me very much. I suppose I shall wish I had done the other way, no matter which course I choose. But I would greatly appreciate your counsel in the matter. Sincerely,

DEBORAH D.

Leave Others' Attitudes Out of the Reckoning

DEAR D. D.: A friend of mine, an unmarried woman of mature years,—serene, civilized and wise in her appraisal of human nature,—occasionally states her belief that it is better for a woman to make even a bad marriage than never to have been a wife. I think there is something to be said for her theory.

Another friend of mine, a woman perhaps 15 years younger than she, who finds herself inexpressibly happy in a marriage which she made after considerable hesitancy a few years ago, remarked recently, "Husbands are are such magnificent institutions! I cannot think what life must be like, for women who never know a husband's companionship. Because there is no doubt that marriage holds the answer to a woman's most fundamental needs,—and I don't mean sex, specifically, either. It's so much more than that. A husband's sympathy, encouragement, understanding of life and disposition to help you solve your problems,—little or big,—sort of puts ground under your feet; gives you a sense of direction and a wonderful feeling of security and power and self-confidence."

I rather imagine that marriage to this man you mention would bring comparable benefits to you. I realize that your habitual or constitutional indecisiveness, plus your family's "strong" (but selfish and constrictingly officious) objections to the proposed match, would make it almost impossible for you to collect your forces and take the step which would commit you to an entirely different type of existence than you have ever known.

But the fact that after long and even skeptical weighing and measuring of the man's character and potential compatibility, you (moralist, perfectionist and conservative that you are), are obliged to concede, in honesty, that his presence and companionship give you a sense of "perfect ease" and a feeling that "nothing else matters,"— this positive (even 'I limited) conclusion leads me to believe your life would be immeasurably enriched if linked, by marriage, to his.

I have known several women of mature years who nervously fought shy of marriage to some devoted suitor, just as you are doing; who, in self-distrust (fearing their possible inadequacy to wifehood), would have voted to restrict the relationship to a lifelong, exclusive, "beautiful friendship." But who, finally, when obliged to choose between marrying the man or forfeiting his attention, tremulously risked the former course, and shortly afterward began wondering why they hadn't taken the plunge when it was first proposed! There is one such woman among my lifelong associates, and ever since she belatedly married, she has been busy matchmaking for her unmarried friends,—which, as her grandmother remarks, "is the surest sign of a happy wife." Like the young wife quoted above, she now feels compassion for every woman who hasn't a husband!

I imagine your inability to "work up any enthusiasm about buying clothes, furnishings, etc.," is due to your straitlaced aversion to becoming the center of a "nine days' wonder" of aghast, amused, astounded comment on the part of your congregation, when and if your engagement is announced and the marriage date set. In other words, you have so long played the part of "woman withdrawn from the world;" of a woman somewhat aloofly superior to the emotions which complicate the lives of womankind in general, that you shrink from stepping into the community spotlight as "Average Woman about to marry Average Man."

In still other words, you hesitate to strike out boldly and lead your own life in such a way as to truly satisfy your own soul;—because you have been so long accustomed to conforming to an impersonalized pattern which you think the public expects of you. But the public, my dear, is essentially a disinterested, if not, indeed, coldly and cynically indifferent audience to which to play, so far as one's intimate life concerned. So my advice to you is to simplify the decision you have to make, by leaving the existing and anticipated attitudes of others completely out of the reckoning, and deciding your future course strictly in terms of your own, and the man's, welfare and preference. Now Paris Offers Wooden Shoes

Paris (via Berlin, delayed).—Wooden shoes for women without sacrificing the chic design which has made Paris feminine footgear famous the world over, are the answer of one enterprising bootmaker to the present acute shortage of leather shoes and the restrictions limiting their purchase.

With typical high heels, the new footwear has lacquered wooden soles covered with a thick strip of rubber. The uppers are made of raffia and specially treated paper, and come in a variety of color combinations, and the designer asserts they are as comfortable as leather shoes.

Cavalier and Puritan Styles Inspire New Spring Costumes

Thomas Jefferson, the grand old gentleman of early Virginia, typifies here the gay style of life that was evidenced in the Cavalier costume of the day. His beruffled shirt front and fluffy cuffs were worn in the true tradition of a Virginia gentleman. Little did he dream they were to form the motif for many spring styles or that women would be adopting this very "masculine" mode. At left, his sleeve frills are expressed in the ruffled cuffs of the blouse

By Jane Driscoll
The Post Fashion Editor.

A proof that we are finally appreciating the riches of our own native land is instanced in the recent tribute paid to historic America by Marian Stephensen. As the candid camera photographer of fashion in "First Fashions of America," she blazed the trail of fashion influences transplanted from old civilizations.

Miss Stephensen scoured the original Thirteen Colonies making printed records in photographs of the life and times of the early settlers. She classifies the early American clothes according to the three regions first to be colonized. As, for example, the flourishing tobacco country of Virginia developed the ample and colorful life of the gay Cavalier. In New England there was the simplicity of the pious Pilgrims and in New York the cosmopolitan fashions of the Dutch Patroons.

Indian Motif Rules Campus Millinery

With campuses in mind, one milliner on the Indian trail tracked her quarry down to the recent Indian exhibit at New York's Modern Museum of Art. College girls should be devotees of a "burden beanie"—a squaw's basket placed on a wool mesh forehead snood which develops pigtails.

For her tailored suits, there are authentic Seminole patterns which face upturned brims or crowns.

VITAMIN BOOSTER

WHEN you eat two ounces of raw cabbage you are getting as much of Vitamin C as when you eat twenty times that much boiled cabbage. That is one reason for making slaw—another is that it is a zestful dish when made properly.

Try making it with a buttermilk dressing this way:

Cole Slaw

Remove the outer leaves and the core from a small head of cabbage. Shred the amount needed—about 4 cupsful to serve 4 persons. Soak the cabbage in ice water for 1 hour. Drain it well and dry thoroughly. Then combine with ½ cup American cheese cut in strips, 1 inch by ¼ inch. Combine 2 teaspoons salt, 2 teaspoons brown sugar, ½ teaspoon paprika, few grains cayenne, 1 cup buttermilk. Pour over cabbage and cheese. Toss lightly. Garnish with green pepper rings. Serves 4.

Red cabbage may also serve in making cole slaw. Very finely shredded red and white cabbage may be combined with good effect.

If you want to make something extra special in the way of cole slaw, place the slaw in a tomato aspic ring. But before you put the slaw in the ring, add some blanched chopped almonds. They add a crunchy bit to the dish.

Lighter Tones Are Featured In Spring Painting Schemes

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Dramatic, suggestive and altogether delightful were the new rooms recently shown by an important decorator. And doubly practical were they for Mrs. Average Budget because the charming decorative ideas were tricks of color and arrangement more than of rare and expensive furnishings. For—as we can't stress too often—color is the least expensive and most effective ingredient in decorating; an exciting color scheme can achieve an interesting room with any simple sort of furniture, while a drab color plan will deaden the beauty of the rarest furniture. Highlights in this exhibition include the following designs for pleasant rooms:

A bedroom with furniture painted in white lacquer with gold decorations used against pink walls. A flowered rug and pink raw silk curtains and spread completed this fresh and pretty room.

Dramatic Living Room

A dining room with walls in beige and bleached oak furniture had two walls interestingly varied with a painted design of fluttering ribbons in yellow and blue, in the loops of which were hung some real plates of appealing flowered design. Yellow curtains and a beige two-tone rug completed this smartly cheerful room.

A living room, also with bleached oak furniture, was made dramatic by large mirror screen that gave the illusion of horizons and space. Walls of horizon blue, flowered chintz curtains, a sand colored rug and a collection of pewter finished a genial ensemble.

A more startling effect was achieved by "optical illusion" in a bedroom. Here white walls were bordered in each corner by vertical bands of greens in different shades. Maple furniture here was set on an all-over leaf patterned rug in the same greens used for the border.

Perhaps the most spectacular room in the show was a bedroom with beige-mahogany furniture against shutter-green walls. Headboards for beds and frames of wall plaques were upholstered in crimson satin, while bedspreads were in Roman stripes.

Highlights in other rooms included such exciting details as gunmetal walls accented with yellow serge curtains; mauve walls with dull green Brussels carpeting; gray walls with a red metal-lame sofa; satin striped white papered walls with a chartreuse love seat; white walls and brilliant pink ceilings with pale maple furniture; several unusual mantel treatments using statuary and draped lengths of fabrics.

Three New Shades Are Spring Tonic In Nail Polish

Take a spring tonic in color! There's nothing like a bracing dash of color to make you feel a brand-new person. Three tonic shades of nail polish have been created to animate your wardrobe, which have been copied in accessories for spring.

They're named for tonics, too, early American bracers that grandma used to take to make her pert and pretty. Rhubarb, a live, clear rosy pink, is the same shade she used for ribbons in her hair.

Fireweed—a crisp clear red—is a shade to brace your navies, neutrals and dark greens. Last is a sun-browned shade, "Ginger Tea," rosy toned and warming. It is a toner-down for ruddy skin tones, a picker-upper for ivory ones. Wear it with your beiges, tortoise shades and soft off-greens.

You can get the three new shades in a trim tonic packet with a boquet for your buttonhole and a heavenly sachet scent. The packet is done in a shiny, flowered bandbox with an atmosphere of country gardens. Locally, they're on display with accessories to match the fingernail polishes at a large department store.

Diamonds, Sables, Names, Rival Lustre of Masterpieces As Gallery Opens Before Before Society From All Over Nation

By Dudley Harmon

A fabulous $50,000,000 worth of paintings was almost outshone by that much worth of diamonds, pearls and sables last night when the new National Gallery of Art was dedicated at a brilliant ceremony. Ambassadors and artists, politicos and painters, museum directors and leaders of society from as far west as California gathered in the huge marble building to hear President Roosevelt open the gallery.

So great was the throng, and so busy was everybody looking at everyone else, that most of the people spent the evening with their backs to the pictures. The room where the President spoke was packed and jammed an hour before the red-coated Marine Band struck up "Hail to the Chief." After a quiet wedding anniversary dinner at the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt accompanied her husband to the opening. Her gown of gray net was sprinkled with sequins and had a little jacket.

Notables draped themselves against the enormous marble pillars in the rotunda, with its statue and splashing fountain. They admired the indoors garden, a patio effect filled with feathery yellow flowers. They began to arrive promptly at 8, checking coats and wraps in one of the many rooms on the first floor assigned for that purpose.

"Everybody" was there. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt came in with her sister-in-law, Countess Szechenyi, with whom she is staying. Leaning against a pillar while she chatted with French Ambassador Henry Haye, Mrs. Vanderbilt was the center of much genteel curiosity. People were fascinated by the choker of square-cut emeralds and diamonds and the enormous diamond and emerald brooch she wore with her orange dinner gown embroidered with gold squares. The inevitable matching head band completed her costume. Countess Szechenyi topped off her white lace frock with a sable jacket, diamond necklace, and pearl earrings.

The Mellon clan was there in full force. Mr. and Mrs. David Bruce and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mellon came on, each couple trailed by an enormous number of guests from dinners they gave beforehand. The Paul Mellons flew up from Hobe Sound for the event. With them were Dr. Stringfellow Barr, president of St. John's College, where Mr. Mellon is a student; Dr. Andrew Avinoff, director of the Carnegie Museum, Dr. E. R. Weidlein, director of the Mellon Institute, and about 100 other Pittsburgh notables.

Gallery Director Brings Guests

The Director of the new Gallery and Mrs. David Finley came in with an impressive group which they previously entertained at dinner. Mrs. Finley was dressed in pink taffeta. Her mother, Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, in black satin, shepherded Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, jr., about the marble rooms. Mrs. Hitchcock is a grandniece of the late Andrew Mellon.

The President of the Metropolitan Museum and Mrs. George Blumenthal, painter John Martin, William Milliken, director of the Cleveland Museum; Dr. C. G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian Institute; Mr. and Mrs. Chester Dale, of New York, and Fiske Kimball, director of the Pennsylvania Museum, were among the art notables in the throng.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field, of New York, accompanied Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, of Washington. Pretty, sweet-faced Mrs. Field wore a gown of dark-brown crinkled crepe, with a hip-length jacket of stone marten and a necklace of diamonds with a heart-shaped pendant. Mrs. Robbins topped off her black frock with a three-quarter length ermine coat.

Mrs. Byron Foy, recently named one of the best dressed women in the country, wore severe black, a brief ermine cape, and a four-strand pearl necklace with a diamond clasp. With her were Mrs. Sturges Finan, former newspaper columnist, and the Ernest Boissevains, of New York.

Anne Morgan Among Guests

Miss Anne Morgan, sister of J. P., came on with the dinner party of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis. As she chatted with the critic, Royal Cortissoz, of New York, Miss Morgan looked commanding in Chantilly lace over silver lame ornamented with black velvet bows. Her heavily brocaded wrap was edged in sable.

The Cabinet was only sparsely represented. At least the only members I saw were the Secretary of War Henry Stimson, who made courtly bows to friends, and the Attorney General, Robert H. Jackson. Mrs. Stimson topped off her frock of black taffeta with an ermine tippet.

Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed arrived in plenty of time to hear the President speak, Mrs. Reed in black velvet, ermine-collared. Among the guests were several who have been absent from Washington. Mr. and Mrs. John Hatch—he is with the museum at Albany, N. Y., and she's the former Olivia Stokes, of Washington—and Olin Dows, of Rhinebeck, N. Y., and this city, were busy being greeted by their many friends here.

"I've lost 10 dinner guests," laughed Mrs. Horace Peters as she threaded her way through the tremendous mob. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson arrived with Mrs. Claude Swanson. One of the loveliest outfits there was worn by Mrs. Patrick Hurley. She wore a blue velvet frock and matching coat with a white fox collar. Others included Mrs. Chauncey Parker in a white net gown with bands of chantilly lace inserted in the skirt; Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Hiram Bingham, Miss Eleanor Flood and Mr. and Mrs. John Crosby.

Diplomats, who had come to view the art treasures, were also on display last evening. The Ambassador of Chile and his chic wife, Senora de Cabero, chatted with the Minister of Luxemburg and Mme. Le Gallais, the latter wearing a magnificent mink coat over her ensemble. Coming in together were the Minister of Norway and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, Mme. Loudon, wife of the Minister of the Netherlands, and Mme. Procope, wife of the Minister of Finland—both sans husbands. Mme. Procope wore a lipstick red frock edged in gold braid. Also in the party were the Counselor of the Netherlands and Baroness van Boetzelaer. She wore a charming taffeta frock in shades of peacock blue and emerald green.

Striking in appearance is Mrs. Bernard Gimbel, who was down from New York for the historic opening. Her chalk-white crepe gown was simply cut and a filmy veil covered her hair and face. Mrs. George Pettengill was there, as were the Ambassador of Mexico and Senora de Castillo Najera, the Minister of Honduras and Senora de Caceras, Admiral Emory Land, and Mrs. Henry Roosevelt.

Gazing raptly at an oil painting by Luini was Senator Arthur Capper. Also enjoying the works of that famed painter were Mr. and Mrs. William Hyett, of Pittsburgh, and Mrs. William N. Doak. Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, wife of the Federal Security Administrator, was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Louise McNutt. They both wore ermine coats over their dinner frocks. Mrs. Bennet Champ Clark arrived in a flaming red gown with wide bishop sleeves, gathered waist and flowing skirt.

New Yorkers Davis Guests

Mrs. Dwight Davis, one of Washington's best dressed, was striking in white crepe sprinkled with silver paillettes. Her gown was fashioned with high necked tailored bodice and accordion pleated skirt. With it she wore a brooch of diamonds and a hip length coat of silver foxes. Miss Maude Wetmore, and Mrs. Cornelius Bliss of New York were in her party.

Samuel Kress, who donated his famous collection of Italian painting to the gallery, was guest of honor at a dinner given before the opening by his niece, Mrs. C. Wesley Frame of Utica, N. Y., and Mr. Frame. They accompanied him to the dedication ceremony, the curator of the gallery and Mrs. John Walker were also present.

Mrs. Eugene Ormandy, wife of the director of the Philadelphia Symphony, wore daffodil yellow. Mrs. Marion Warburg was chic in silver lame and a coat of silver foxes. Mrs. Shaw Parker came with William Emslie of the British Embassy. The Joseph Pulitzers of St. Louis were accompanied by James Mitchell and Miss Virginia Sachs, daughter of the Boston art expert. Professor Paul Sachs. Mrs. Pulitzer's unusual frock was made of plane blue wool and had a jacket emboridered with clusters of seed pearls.

Senator Joseph Guffey, Representative Joseph Martin and Senator and Mrs. Ralph Brewster were among the many present from Congress. Mrs. McKee Dunn, in gray crepe, was accompanied by her pretty daughter, Mildred. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover had Miss Nancy Glover with them.

Mrs. George Howe wore champagne-colored satin and a cluster of red carnations to match her velvet bag. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Burling, jr., Mrs. George Hewitt Myers, in white; Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose, leaning against a column to rest; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bruce, Dr. and Mrs. Benjamin Rones, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Dominick, Miss Stellita Stapleton with her fiance, George Renchard; Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Mrs. R. H. Dunlap, in green crepe with orchids; Marshall Exnicios, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Cartier, of New York, she with several twinkling diamond bracelets; Mr. and Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne, of Mount Kisco—her father is director of the Chicago Art Institute, and Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Max Kauffmann were others of the thousands present.

By 10 o'clock the crowd in the rotunda had reached gigantic proportions. Listening intently to the President's speech as it came over the public address system were Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz and Mrs. Norman Gerstenfeld, who wore a stunning ermine cape over her white crepe dress. A heavy chain of silver and turquoise completed the ensemble. Still others were Representative and Mrs. Dow Harter, Mr. and Mrs. Carlos del Mar, and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem.

China's Cooperatives Will Point Way for World, Says Miss Boynton

May Save 'Western Nervous System,' Professor Asserts

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

The Post Club Editor.

China's industrial cooperatives will not only be the salvation of China but will point the way for the world, says Miss Grace M. Boynton, who has spent the past 21 years in China; and is now in this country.

Miss Boynton, a professor of English in Yenching University, returned to the United States last July to spend a year and is in Washington for a few days, doing research at the Library of Congress. She predicts that the West will experience an influence from China greater and more rapid than that of Greece on Europe during the renaissance. She went to the Far East as a Christian missionary and is now a missionary from China to America, she says.

"China will be the salvation of the Western nervous system," declares Miss Boynton. "The whole industrial system of the West is iniquitous, great masses of people employed in industry where no one person is responsible. Chinese cooperatives are developing the small unit where the individual survives. The lack of human values here should be recovered and I believe China has the answer."

China, said Miss Boynton, has a civilization rich beyond our understanding, and one which has been built up without the machine.

H. H. Kung, head of the Chinese Cooperatives, recently summoned Y. P. Mei, a member of the Yenching University faculty, to act as his personal representative in the cooperative organization. This educator, who was a professor of philosophy and had been trained in England, left Pieping after the Japanese occupation, says Miss Boynton, and went into Northwest China in the interest of rural education. His work, which was supported by the British Boxer indemnity fund, led to his present appointment by Mr. Kung. The university, therefore, feels it has a definite part in the cooperatives.

MISS GRACE M. BOYNTON

China is in a hopeful position, Miss Boynton believes, and is fighting the battle for democracy in the Far East with a united front. The totalitarian idea is repugnant to the Chinese, she says.

Yenching University has continued in session on its own campus, says Miss Boynton, as it is supported from America and grants its degrees under the Board of Regents of New York State. It has sent out about 600 students since the war began in 1937 and has now 1,100 on its campus, 300 of whom are girls.

The Japanese, she says, have made an effort to control its activities, seeking without success to have Japanese students admitted, the faculty expanded to include Japanese professors, and to have the students join in parades celebrating Japanese victories. There is but one Japanese professor and he is a man respected for his academic eminence. He does research and does not teach.

Miss Boynton has given several lectures on Chinese gardens before the Harvard School of Landscape Gardening since her return to her home in Medford, Mass. She attended Packer Institute in the class with Miss Lena Hitchcock, of this city, past national president of the Women's Overseas Service League, and is a graduate of Wellesley College.

D. A. R. Conference Devotes First Day to Committee Reports

Reports of committee chairmen were the chief business of the first day's session of the annual State conference of the District Daughters of the American Revolution, held yesterday at Memorial Continental Hall. Mrs. Harry C. Oberholser, State regent, presided.

Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, chairman of approved schools, reported 30 scholarships provided by the local chapters and divided among the various schools as follows: four to Blue Ridge, seven to Crossnore, one to Hindman, three to Maryville, one to Pine Mountain, 13 to Tamassee and one to Glen Eden.

Several chapters have also sent boxes of clothing and gifts to the schools, such as medicine, dolls, flags and contributions to the fund for the heating plant at Kate Duncan Smith School at Grant, Ala.

Mrs. William T. Clerk, chairman of the student loan fund, stated in her report that the $5,000 endowment fund established at George Washington University by the D. A. R. had been completed this year and five new students were being assisted from the fund. This loan fund is open to girls and boys who are descendants of patriots of the Revolution and who have completed at least one semester of work in an accredited college.

Mrs. Elliott Haag, State chairman of the Real Daughters committee, spoke of the two real Daughters of the American Revolution still living. They are Mrs. Annie Knight Gregory, born March 23, 1843, who lives with her son at Williamsport, Pa., and draws a pension of $25 a month from the national society. The other Real Daughter is Mrs. Caroline Randolph, born September 19, 1849. She draws a pension of $60 a month. The two Real Daughters have outlived the last Real Son of the Revolution, William Constance Wheeler, of South Woodbury, Vt., who died in February, at the age of 93.

There are now 27 Junior American Citizen Clubs in the District, according to the report of Mrs. Russell H. Stine, chairman of the committee sponsoring these groups of juniors. The membership is over 1,000. The clubs, formed in schools and community centers, encourage boys and girls in better American citizenship.

At the morning session there were greetings from Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general of the national society; Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, vice president general; Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, honorary vice president general; Mrs. John Morrison Kerr, president of the National Society, Children of the American Revolution; Mrs. Carl H. Giroux, president of the District C. A. R.; Dr. Clifton P. Clark, president of the District S. A. R., and Col. F. Granville Munson, president of the District S. A. R.

At the morning session the assembly call was played by Edward Masters, of the U. S. Marine Band and the entrance march by Mrs. Claughton West. Singing of "America" was led by Caroline Schaller.

Other music included songs by Eleanor Westergren Ball, soprano, accompanied by Mrs. Glen Edgington and Clark Paulsen, barytone, accompanied by Elizabeth Merz Butterfield. In the afternoon, Mrs. Roy O. Woodruff, wife of Representative Woodruff, of Michigan, sang, accompanied by Mrs. Lois Marshall Hicks, State chairman of music. There was also a program by the Girl Home Makers, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Ruth M. Franklin.

Last night, following a concert by the U. S. Marine Band Orchestra at 7 o'clock, the procession of the State officers and chapter regents was staged. The rest of the session was devoted to reports of the chapter regents, with music interspersed. Mrs. Marguerite Schondau, soprano, accompanied by Jewell Downs; the D. A. R. Chorus, accompanied by Mrs. West, and George Harold Miller, barytone, and Howard Clayton, tenor, accompanied by Gertrude Kroto, provided music between reports.

The conference continues today, with the closing banquet tonight.

MacLeish to Speak

Archibald MacLeish, famous poet and Librarian of Congress, will address the luncheon meeting of the Women's National Press Club today. Mrs. MacLeish will also be a guest at the function, which will take place at the Willard at 1 o'clock.

Democratic Women Hear Lindley on Arms

The United States must speed its production and see that strikes do not slow it down, Ernest Lindley, Post columnist, declared in a talk at the Monday luncheon of the Woman's National Democratic Club.

Quoting figures to show the urgent need for aid to Britain, Mr. Lindley said that in 1939 Germany was spending $1,000,000,000 a month on armament. Now it is spending twice as much, whereas Great Britain is spending $1,250,000,000. The only way Great Britain can slow up the German production, he pointed out, is with the use of bombing planes.

Half of the entire production power of both Great Britain and Germany is now going into armament, he said, which means four hours of the eight-hour day, while this country is giving only 18 minutes of the eight-hour day. It is necessary, he said, that this country devote two hours of the eight to armament production, half for Britain and half for the United States.

Mr. Lindley gave other comparative figures, including those on steel, illustrating the need of help for Great Britain from the United States.

At the head table were Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, second vice president of the club, who presided and introduced the speaker; Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, Mrs. John H. Tolan, Mrs. Thomas F. Ford, Mrs. Clarence F. Lea, all wives of members of Congress from California; Mrs. James M. Fitzpatrick, wife of Representative Fitzpatrick, of New York; Mrs. Joseph Griesmer, of California; Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mrs. Barnet Nover, Mrs. Francis Cabell Brown, Mrs. Meade Fletcher, jr., and Miss Frances Lide.

Dr. Ada Comstock Guest Speaker At A. A. U. W. Tea

Dr. Ada Louise Comstock, president of Radcliffe College, was guest speaker yesterday at the tea of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women. Miss Katherine Chase Berry, president of the local Radcliffe alumnae, was hostess for the afternoon.

Dr. Comstock, who was president of the national organization at the time the present headquarters at 1634 I Street was purchased, recalled the transaction. She signed the $100,000 bonds with trepidation, she said, as the association then was not a thriving organization and there was no real security.

Coast Official Here, Planning Folk Festival

John Anson Ford, Los Angeles County supervisor whose home bailiwick is Hollywood, conferred in Washington yesterday on plans for a great Hemispherical Folk Festival which he hopes will bring to California next year leading exponents of the folk cultures of all of the American Republics. This might be a step, he said, toward a permanent cultural exchange foundation.

FORD

In talks with Miss Sarah Gertrude Knott, national director, and Maj. M. J. Pickering, business manager of the National Folk Festival, Ford asserted his conviction that "public music in America today stands just about where public education stood a hundred years ago."

"If democracy is to work," he said, "there must be found a high, common ground on which all sections and every stratum of our diverse society can meet. In times of crisis war creates such a meeting ground; in peace times it might be found in music."

Here Asking Funds

Ford's trip to Washington had official color. The festival conferences, he said, represents his personal interest. Official the Los Angeles County supervisor met with officers of the Defense Administration to urge allocation of funds for construction of better roads, housing, and storm drains, and for library and educational facilities in communities where defense industries have arisen.

At the office of acting Work Projects Commissioner Howard Hunter, Ford lodged a protest against proposed reductions in WPA quotas in southern California, where 60 per cent of the WPA population was described as unskilled workers.

Then Ford turned to the festival possibilities. He wishes to use the program technic created by the festivals sponsored by The Washington Post National Folk Festival Association, and hopes to send to the eighth annual festival in Constitution Hall, May 1, 2 and 3, a group from Pasadena to present old Mexican songs and dances. This group is directed by Eleanor Hague, author and authority on Latin-American music.

Sees Social Amalgam

In worthy music for everybody the Hollywood supervisor sees a social amalgam of fundamental significance, he says, and he has little patience with the composer who bends the uses of good, meaningful folk song to night club tunes in jazz transcriptions.

"The early music of a nation must be accounted among its most precious assets," said Ford, "and its early songs, instinct with melody and story, may be a leavening process of real value in a nation's life. Our social processes have been speeded up in recent years, and good, old, earthy tunes faced extinction in the craze for 'low lights and dirty music.'"

Finance Firms Liable in Crash After Seizure

Finance companies yesterday were declared liable to suit for accidents which happen after they take possession of automobiles on which payments are in default.

The United States Court of Appeals here sent back to the District Court for trial the $10,000 damage suit of Mrs. Pearl E. Mason, 1116 First Street Southeast, against Automobile Finance Co., Inc., 3068 M Street Northwest.

Justice Wiley Rutledge said the facts, not substantially in dispute, were that in 1937 payments on an automobile financed by the compnay fell behind. Clinton Whitley, 1302 Twenty-second Street Northwest, an elevator operator, wished to take over the car and assume the payments. After Whitley paid $130 for various repairs, the finance company placed its dealers' plates on the automobile and on August 4, 1937, allowed Whitley to drive it out to purchase other needed parts. On this drive there was a collision in which Mrs. Mason suffered cuts, head injuries and internal injuries.

The District Court ruled that she could not sue the the finance company. However, said Justice Rutledge, the finance company's agent "took physical custody of the car, both by attaching defendant's license plates to it, thus making is possible for the car to be driven on the streets, and by assuming control of its movements. . . . The jury should have been allowed to infer . . . that at the time of the collision the defendant was in control of the car and was exercising that control for the purpose of carrying on its own business."

Appeals Court Upholds Right of A.F.L. to Transfer Members

The American Federation of Labor's power to force members of one of its affiliates to transfer to another was upheld yesterday by the United States Court of Appeals here, which declared the courts cannot interfere with the transaction.

The court dissolved an injunction by which District Court Justice T. Alan Goldsborough stopped A. F. of L. enforcement of its decision that several thousand brewery drivers must leave the International Brewery Union and join the International Teamsters Union.

The stake in the litigation, which culminated 40 years of wrangling, was about $60,000 a year paid in dues by the disputed members.

The brewery union became an A. F. of L. affiliate in 1887. The truck drivers joined in 1900 and claimed jurisdiction over brewery drivers, which was granted by the A. F. of L. in 1935. The brewery union filed suit in 1937 and won an injunction before Justice Goldsborough October 6, 1939, after a trial of nearly four months, in which thousands of pages of testimony were taken. The A. F. of L. appeal was argued before Justices Justin Miller, Wiley Rutledge and Harold Stephens April 19, 1940.

After 11 months of consideration, Justice Miller announced the court's findings in a 27-page opinion yesterday.

"The A. F. L. acted within the scope of its delegated constitutional power," he said. "This being true, there is no foundation for equitable relief, or reason for judicial interference, as regards any proper action by the Federation of the Teamsters Union in carrying out that decision."

Justice Miller also held that the case was one in which the use of injunctions was forbidden by the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

Justice Stephens, in a brief concurring opinion, indorsed the court's findings on these points.

Joseph Obergfell, president of the brewery union, said at his Cincinnati headquarters that "the decision makes slaves of the men who belong to the American Federation of Labor."

"Small unions," Obergfell added, "by this ruling are made completely subject to the domination and control of the large unions like the teamsters which have control of the executive board of the A. F. L. It must not be forgotten that 99 per cent of the 29,000 members of the brewery union voted in a referendum to retain their affiliation with our union. The court's opinion nullifies the Wagner Act in that it gives the A. F. L. the power to defeat the will of a majority of workers and empowers the A. F. L. to require workers to be represented by a union not of their own choosing; for their choice the A. F. L. under this decision may substitute its own."

Joseph A. Padway argued the appeal for the A. F. L., of which he is general counsel. The brewery workers were represented by Attorneys Martin F. O'Donoghue and William J. Hughes, with Nicholas J. Chiaviclone as an associate.

COMING SOON TO WASHINGTON

13th St. and New York Ave., N.W.

American children learn to meet democratic life by actually seeing it in action, by doing, making, sharing, discussing.

In the classic tradition, students at St. John's of Annapolis discover the circulatory system just as Harvey discovered it.

Adult education is now being absorbed by more than 29,000,000 people in the U. S. beyond regular school years.

"Town Hall" forums attract a regular weekly radio audience of 3,000,000 set owners—typical of how new techniques are employed to further enlightenment in our democracy.

No, Mr. Hitler—you just don't talk our language!

This advertisement is one of a series studying our democratic American way of life.

FROM ACROSS THE SEAS, the Leader's voice screams, "The purpose of education is to create the political soldier . . . in the case of female education, the main stress should be last of all on development of the intellect!"

As the logical fruit of such a creed, great books are burned, great teachers hounded into the grave or exile. The mass of German youth is taught not to think but to obey. Special schools train a few in the use of ruthless violence, deliberate dishonesty, and quack racial dogma so that they shall constitute an "elite" Fuehrer class—masters of the many in the Nazi plan of things to come.

No, Mr. Hitler!

America, of course, rejects such a creed as barbarous and perverted.

We believe in the democratic definition of education—education as the process of stimulating free minds and preparing vigorous intellects for living effectively and co-operatively in a commonwealth of free persons. And as evidence of our faith in this creed, American education today is more vigorous, more important than ever before in our history.

Actually, our educational effort now is bigger than any single U. S. business enterprise!

Our Investment In The Future

Education in this country employs more than 1,000,000 people. It spends some $2,000,000,000 a year. Its capital, invested in buildings and equipment, totals more than $12,300,000,000. By any such measure, it tops all major public as well as private undertakings!

More resources and a larger share of our national income than ever before go for the support of education and the maintenance of school facilities. The Federal Government has given the States an area larger than all of Italy in land grants for schools.

The highest proportion of our nation's population in history is in the schools today. More than 30,000,000 Americans—about one out of four—are full-time students in schools or colleges; more than 90% of them in public institutions. Today the number of students attending college is more than three times what it was in 1920. Enrollment in our high schools has quadrupled since 1920, doubled since 1930.

We're Never Too Old To Learn

And that's by no means all. Beyond the regular school years, there are more than 29,000,000 people engaged in adult education. Their classes now run the whole gamut of both cultural and vocational subjects. In hundreds of towns, on the evenings when adult classes meet, high school halls are crowded with grown men and women—enjoying together the sympathetic companionship, the stimulus, the enlightening adventure of democratic group study.

Democratic American education is not perfect. But undeniably it is a living, adventurous, advancing force. Our fund of knowledge, both in subjects to be taught and in ways of teaching them, is constantly increasing!

We Learn Outside The Classroom, Too

American education now extends far beyond school halls. For example, on the radio, the "Town Hall" forums of open, lusty, controversial debate on urgent political, social, and economic issues, reach a week-by-week audience of 3,000,000 set-owners. The major radio networks regularly devote up to 20% of their total broadcasting time to genuinely educational programs—reaching each week an aggregate number of homes estimated at 15,000,000.

The great periodicals of this nation, too—as "living text books"—play an invaluable part in helping to inform, enlighten, and stimulate American minds, both young and old.

LIFE Magazine, for instance, offers to a weekly audience of more than 20,000,000 readers vividly presented facts, truth, reality concerning this complex world—the world they must understand if their way of life is to endure, to flourish, and to inspire all men of good will throughout the earth.

LIFE is proud of the contribution it is making in these crucial times toward the successful functioning of democracy. And, as "America's Most Potent Editorial Force," LIFE is dedicated to continuing this contribution both now and after these times of crisis have passed.

PWA May Be Revived To Help in Defense

Public Works Administration is likely to get a new lease on life through the ever-expandiing defense program.

Congress probably will give it the job of supplying schools, sewers, water lines and other public facilities in defense communities. Federal Security Agency and OPM also are understood to be angling for the assignment, but PWA is highly favored as it has proved itself to be a capable builder. The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is studying a bill to authorize an appropriation of $150,000,000 to get the work underway. Requests for work costing nearly two billions have been received.

PWA has stopped firing employes. The agency which had a top of 10,500 employes 18 months ago, now has less than 2,000 and most of those will be discharged before July 1 unless it is given new work. PWA also is making a survey of its furloughed employes to determine how many are available for jobs. It would have to hire back hundreds if it is orered to construct defense facilities. Hundreds of PWA engineers and accountants have been hired by War and Navy.

Maxwell DeVoe has been appointed chief of the Division of Organization and Personnel Management at Agriculture. He replaces Ralph Olmstead, former secretary to former Senator Pope, who is assistant to Undersecretary Appleby. DeVoe has been chief of the Rhode Island Civil Service Commission and before that was Farm Credit personnel director . . . Commerce sluethS investigate charges of subversive activities against an average of three employes weekly but to date accusations against only one employe have been substantiated. Pro-German charges made against an employe in 1918 have been revived, but without basis.

Surplus Marketing Unit Expects Boom

Surplus Marketing Administration is expected to boom shortly. Informed sources say it'll be given the task of buying food for England, Greece, China under the lend-lease bill. Apparently anticipating the lightning to strike, SMA Chief Milo Perkins has done a bit of reorganizing. He has brought in Jonathan Garst from the San Francisco regional office to head the distribution division and Garst is expected to speed up the distribution of foods to needy families and to hot school lunch projects.

Garst has the reputation of having the strongest voice in the Federal service. His friends say he doesn't need to phone, that he could open his window and be heard across the city. H. C. Albin has the job of procuring commodities and his division will be increased tremendously if and when SMA buys for the fighting democracies. SMA isn't under Civil Service.

FCA employes have been asked not to turn on the lights unless it's absolutely necessary. The electric feeder lines are overloaded and officials are afraid of a fire breaking out. The lines are being repaired . . . Harold L. Ickes today will have served as Interior Secretary longer than any other person, a record of eight years and 14 days. Under his regime the department has grown from 15,000 to 42,000 employes and greatly expanded the scope of its activities . . . Marshall Dimock, Justice official, will discuss "Bureaucracy in Industry and Government" tonight before the Society for the Advancement of Management at Barker Hall, Seventeenth and K Streets.

There's such a shortage of Government building mechanics that several have been detailed from the Navy Yard to make repairs at the Munitions Building. Navy Yard mechanics, who are paid around $2,200, are working along side of building mechanics paid an average of $1,750. Building mechanics want pay raises and some officials believe promotions will have to be made or the Government won't be able to hire competent mechanics. Only about one out of four now accept mechanic jobs. Public Buildings has the same trouble trying to hire building guards. A bill that would raise their salaries is being considered in Congress.

In answer to the question, "Do you have any service-connected disability?" an applicant for a Civil Service job replied: "Yes, my wife."

Practice Makes Perfect

Sheldon B. Akers, of Garrett Park, Md., a member of the Brookings Institution staff which recently completed a survey of Montgomery County, (Md.) government, yesterday stepped from the theoretical to the practical study of county administration. He was drawn for service on the county grand jury at Rockville, Md.

The Luck o' the Irish

Philadelphia, March 17 (A.P.).—Patrick J. Murphy was fined $50 today on a charge of distributing Irish Sweepstake tickets.

Judge Guy K. Bard commented that he ordinarily would have imposed a heavier sentence, "but this being St. Patrick's Day we can afford to be little lenient."

House Group To See D. C. Fiscal Aides

Conference Today; Dirksen Proposes Substitute to Plan Offered by Overton

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

With two proposals for increasing the Federal payment to the District before it, the House Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs will tackle the problem of finding new sources of revenue for the National Capital at a conference today with municipal officials.

The way was paved for the conference yesterday by the filing of a Senate report on the Overton-Hunter formula and the introduction of a bill in the House by Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, to base the United States payment on the valuation of Federal property in Washington.

Chairman Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, hopes to get from the District officials estimates of how much additional revenue will be needed in the next few years to provide municipal facilities for the thousands of new residents brought here by the defense program.

"Interminable Controversy"

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, author of the land-ratio formula, called attention to the excessive demands of the Federal Government for municipal services in filing the unanimous report of the Senate District Committee.

"There has been an interminable controversy throughout the years, from 1879 to the present, in respect to the amount and method of Federal payments to the District," the report stated.

"The purpose of this bill is to put an end to this controversy by providnig a fixed formula regulating the payment."

Overton's "Essentials"

Striking indirectly at the Dirksen plan for an annual evaluation of Federal property in Washington, the Senate report states:

"No formula of such payment will be satisfactory or successful, or serve the purpose intended, unless it is based upon the three following essentials:

"1. The factors of the formula should be noncontroversial, fixed, certain and self-operating.

"2. The factors should not be of arbitrary selection but should rest upon reasonable and substantial bases.

"3. The application of the factors should result in equal justice being done to both the National Government and the District Government."

Dirksen's Provisions

The Dirksen bill, after setting forth the plan for an annual valuation of Federal land and buildings in the District by a three-man board of Treasury experts, states its purpose thus:

It is the purpose of the report of the board to provide Congress with information on which to base a determination as to the appropriate amount to be paid to the District of Columbia toward defraying of the expenses of the District of Columia in lieu of the real estate taxes which would be realized from such land and land improvements if such land and improvements were not exempt from taxation because of Federal ownership."

Dirksen said it is not his intention to apply the $1.75 real estate tax to the valuation arrived at by the board, but he predicted that his proposal would give the District a larger Federal payment than the present $6,000,000.

Funds in Sight, D. C. Assured Of Symphony

Washington will have a symphony orchestra next season.

This announcement was made yesterday by L. Corrin Strong, president of the board of directors of the Orchestra Association, following virtual attainment of the goal of $107,600 necessary to maintain the orchestra in the 1941-42 season.

Although the sum has not been entirely accounted for to date, the board of directors unanimously voted to go ahead with all plans for the orchestra's eleventh season on the assumption the balance of the sustaining fund shortly will be attained.

Speaking for the board, Strong said the announcement was made "in fairness to the public and to the members of the orchestra."

Nearly 100 volunteer workers continued to raise money for the fund following closing of the drive February 28.

Clothing Fire Set by Cigarette Fatal to Blue Plains Inmate

The death of a 76-year-old patient, an inmate of the District Home for the Aged at Blue Plains, D. C., who died Saturday in Gallinger Hospital of severe burns to his body, was recorded by police yesterday. Gallinger authorities neglected to inform them until then, police said.

The aged victim was William Thomas, a patient transferred to Blue Plains from Gallinger for convalescent care who died in the hospital 1¼ hours after his bedclothing had caught fire from a cigarette he was smoking.

Mr. Thomas, who was burned at 4 p. m., was first treated at the home by Dr. Joseph Wallace, resident physician, who then ordered him taken to Gallinger.

Dr. Wallace said he then notified police to inform the victim's two sons that their father was in critical condition at the hospital.

Mr. Thomas died at 3:30 p. m. Saturday, according to Blue Plains records, and Dr. Max Feldman, Gallinger staff physician, notified acting District Coroner Christopher J. Murphy.

When notified Saturday evening, Dr. Murphy said last night, he ordered the body removed to the District Morgue. On Sunday he inspected the body, he said, and issued a certificate of accidental death.

Lieut. Darnall, Dr. Murphy said, apparently had not heard of the death until yesterday morning when he telephoned the acting lieutenant of the Homicide Squad to inform him he had issued the certificate. Lieut. Darnall immediately ordered an investigation by officers of the Eleventh Precinct. Deaths other than natural causes are always investigated by the Homicide Squad.

When informed of developments late yesterday, Dr. Feldman said that Gallinger authorities did not inform police of the death because the patient came from another District institution.

Solemn Notes Permeate Irish Celebrations

With greenery in their buttonholes, the Irish celebrated St. Patrick's Day yesterday, starting it solemnly with a high mass at St. Patrick's Church and finishing off the day with dances to traditional Irish tunes.

Though lively Irish brogue and banter marked many of the gatherings, groups at this year's observance turned serious thoughts to the present situation of their ancestors' homeland. Such a note was sounded at the mass in the sermon by the Rev. Dr. John Tracy Ellis, instructor in history, Catholic University.

He made a comparison between the barbarism in Europe in the day of St. Patrick in the fifth century and the "barbarism on the loose" today. Ireland, before, was spared from the barbarian invasion and was of service to Christian Europe after she began to rise from destruction, he said. The hope may be entertained today, he said, that Ireland may again be spared so she may repeat such service in the days of reconstruction.

Shamrocks Displayed

The Commodore John Barry Division, Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Ladies Auxiliary, with shamrocks in buttonholes, gathered at Carroll Hall and marched to the front of St. Patrick's Church to form a guard of honor for Bishop Joseph M. McNamara and the clergy. Bishop McNamara presided and the Rev. Dr. John K. Cartwright, pastor of Church of the Immaculate Conception, was celebrant.

The green, white and orange Irish flag flew at full staff yesterday in front of the legation, 2310 Tracy Place Northwest. The Minister, Robert Brennan, was in Detroit, speaking at two gatherings. His daughter, Miss Brennan, was busy yesterday preparing to take part in a Columbia Network broadcast last night about Irishmen who had a part in the early development of Washington.

Irish in U. S. Extolled

Irish War Veterans Post No. 17 had a double celebration. A wreath was laid at the statue of Commodore John Barry in Franklin Park, where Representative Lawrence Connery (Democrat), of Massachusetts, spoke on the loyalty of citizens of Irish extraction to America throughout the years and in the present defense program. Michael Casey, commander of the post, spoke on the life of Barry.

Other events which topped off the St. Patrick's Day celebration included: the annual ball of the United Club of Washington at the Kennedy-Warren; dance of the Massachusetts Society of Washington at the Wardman Park Hotel; dance of the Delaware State Society at the Thomas Circle Club.

St. Patrick's Speaker Urges Oppressed to Follow Irish Lead

Subjugated nations such as Belgium, Holland and France can learn from Ireland that they are never really conquered as long as they're determined to be free, the Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., of Catholic University faculty said at the thirteenth annual banquet of the Society of Friendly Sons of St. Patrick of Washington last night at the Mayflower Hotel.

Several hundred men were seated in the Irish atmosphere created in the Sapphire Room by green candles, traditional tunes, hearty laughter and such menu items as "vegetable salad Limerick" and "Bandon potatoes, Tommy Murphy."

Former Senator Ashurst, speaking on "Erin's Contribution," referred to the culture of the Irish people, their devotion to liberty and their part in establishing independence on this continent.

Malcolm G. Gibbs, president, was toastmaster. The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, gave the invocation.

Hibernians Pledge Unity To Roosevelt

Declaring that the Irish Catholic group in this country can give President Roosevelt the unity that he asks for, the Right Rev. Msgr. Peter Guilday, of Catholic University faculty, in a St. Patrick's Day address last night said that the President's "declaration of alliance" is in some respects harder to bear than a declaration of war.

"We Irish can stand a declaration of war any time," he told the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies' Auxiliary at their annual banquet at the Mayflower Hotel. Then he referred to the sacrifices for which the President had called in the "declaration of alliance."

"We have to have quiet nerves and a sound heart to stand that," he added.

He referred briefly to the movement "to crush the Catholic Irish that belong in Ireland" and compared it with the "tyranny that Hitler is practising."

Msgr. Guilday said that an alliance has now been perfected in which the two great English-speaking countries are bound together. "We have to take it, we Irish, whether we like it or not," he added. And he said that "we are all obedient to the wishes" of the President.

The unity which the Irish Catholic group can give the President is "a unity from our hearts," he said, because "the one thing that keeps us together as one family is our faith."

More than 800 persons gathered in the Mayflower ballroom for the dinner, topped with entertainment with an Irish flavor. Agnes Dowd, Margaret Howard, Peter Slevin, John Murtaugh and James Graham sang Irish songs. Sylvester Reilly with Irish step-dancing, Frankie Govan with accordion and Patrick O'Sullivan with Irish bagpipes were among other entertainers.

Joseph A. Daly, chairman of the committee for the celebration, was toastmaster.

C. I. O. Plans Drive to Enroll U. S. Workers

An immediate drive to organize en masse the more than 175,000 unorganized workers in the Federal and District governments was announced last night at a meeting of the Industrial Union Council, delegate body of the Congress of Industrial Organzations locals in Washington.

Meeting at 532 Seventeenth Street Northwest, delegates cited as needs for organization of Government employes:

A growing tendency toward lengthening working hours through institution of overtime work and reduction of purchasing power through rising living costs in the Capital.

The campaign to bring Government workers into the C. I. O.'s United Federal Workers of America will be the first mass organization drive attempted in the Federal Government, leaders asserted.

At the same meeting the council adopted a full-page statement attacking "some members of local draft boards" for suspecting "any man who has married since October of attempting to evade the draft."

In other actions the council supported C. I. O. coal and steel negotiations and condemned the proposed national mediation board as an attempt to "hamstring" labor's right to organize and strike.

Citizens Vote To Help Map D. C. Defense

Interfederation Asks Resident Lawyer Be Named To District Bench

Cooperation with the District Defense Council, which is now planning defense measures for the Washington metropolitan area, was voted last night by the Interfederation Conference, representing more than 50,000 members of citizens' associations in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Conference delegates at the monthly Y. W. C. A. dinner-meeting pointed out that citizens' associations could be of value in planning civilian recreation programs for service men and in furthering local defense projects.

Contacts already developed by citizens' organizations may be helpful to defense planners, it was suggested.

The conference also urged immediate appointment of "a lawyer practicing law in the District and a bona fide resident of the Washington metropolitan area" as a judge in the District Court to fill the current vacancy.

Traffic Proposals

Delegates voted to oppose closing of Virginia Avenue between Eighteenth and Nineteenth Streets Northwest and urged the "elimination or limitation" of truck traffic on Queens Chapel Road in Prince Georges County and the District.

In his report of citizens' activities in Washington, Harry Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, told of the District associations' opposition to the newly formed municipal assembly and accused it of being a "complete duplication of the work of the federation."

Stull asserted that the assembly "because of divergent elements contained in it, will not be able to agree on anything of importance to the District." He accused the new organization of containing Communists and of being "evidently conceived by the C. I. O. and local welfare groups."

Lincoln Park

An entire new board of directors for the District Tuberculosis Association was recommended last night by the Lincoln Park Citizens Association.

"Conditions which have prevailed for a long time" were given as the reason for this action, which came two days after all but six employes of the tuberculosis association had either resigned or been discharged.

The citizens also authorized a committee to consider establishment of a "Human Relations Court" for Washington and indorsed the appointment of Capt. Joseph Morgan, of the Fifth Police Precinct, to succeed Inspector William E. Holmes, who retires April 1.

Hank Greenberg's Status Changed to Class 1A

Detroit Star Faces April Army Call

Medical Advisory Board Gets Tiger Slugger's Case for Action in Detroit

By the Associated Press

Detroit, March 17.—Hank Greenberg, Detroit Tigers' slugging outfielder, who received the Most Valuable Player Award last year and is reported to hold a $50,000 contract for this year, may be in the Army before the 1941 season is more than a few days old.

His draft board placed him in Class 1A today, but announced it had decided to refer his case to the medical advisory board for a report and would reconsider the classification if the medical board found him unfit for general military service.

Examination at Lakeland

Greenberg took his initial examination at Lakeland, Fla., where the Detroit baseball team is training, and was reported to have been recomended for deferred status under the Selective Service Act because of flat feet.

Today, however, Ben. O. Shepherd, chairman of Board No. 23 in Detroit, where the Tigers' heaviest hitter is registered, issued this statement.

"Henry Greenberg has been classified in Class 1-A, but his case is being referred to the medical advisory board for a report. If that board reports that he is unfit for general military service, the classification will be reconsidered by the board."

Greenberg Is Ready

"When they want me, I am ready," Greenberg commented at Lakeland when informed of the draft board's action in overruling the recommendation of the physician who gave him his initial examination. Because of Hank's flat feet, the Florida physician had recommended he be placed in Class 1-B which would have meant an indefinite deferment of his summons for Army training.

While a number of selectees with varying degrees of foot trouble have been accepted for service none in Class 1-B have yet been sent to Army camps from Detroit.

Greenberg probably will be given his examination by the medical advisory board at Henry Ford Hospital here when the Tigers reach Detroit after their opening series in St. Louis.

Mrs. Page Tops Golf Field In Midsouth

By the Associated Press

Southern Pines, N. C., March 17.—Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, Chapel Hill housewife who once was national champion, set the pace today with an 81 which led the field in the first round of the thirteenth annual Women's Midsouth Golf tournament. She is the defending champion.

Mrs. Louise Fordyce, of Youngstown, Ohio, a veteran of the old days of the tournament, made a brilliant comeback in the field of 40 golfers and turned in an 85, four strokes behind Mrs. Page. Bunched at 87 were Deborah Verry, of Worcester, Mass., 1936 champion; Marcia Bassett, of Buffalo, N. Y., a newcomer to Midsouth tournament play, and Betty Abernethy, of Pittsburgh.

Miss Fordyce, after pounding out some long drives, was even par, 43, on the first nine. She took birdies on the second and eighth and was one over on the first and fourth. She was back in 42, two over women's par. She took a birdie on the tenth, was two over on the eleventh and one over on the fourteenth.

Mrs. Page, turning in a 40—41, two strokes under par for women, was not up to her usual form. High winds which swept the course were responsible for much of the high scoring and for the failure of some of the contestants to turn in cards.

The tournament is a 54-hole medal affair. Eighteen holes will be played tomorrow and another 18 on Wednesday.

Wisconsin Beats Miami Boxers

Madison, Wis., March 17 (AP).—The University of Wisconsin boxing team won its fourth victory of the season tonight by trouncing Miami University, 6½ to 1½, before a crowd of 12,000 fans.

Miami's points came on Joe Banano's light-heavyweight decision over Nick Lee. Wisconsin's 1940 N. C. A. A. champion, and Joey Church's draw with Badger Gene Rankin in a lightweight bout.

Little, Metz Lose Match At Pinehurst

Byron Nelson, Hogan Win British Relief Match; Pros Warm For $4,000 Open

By the United Press

Pinehurst, N. C., March 17.—A crisp north wind, sweeping across Pinehurst's No. 2 championship course, sent most scores into above par levels today as Byron Nelson and Ben Hogan defeated Lawson Little and Dick Metz 4 and 3 in an exhibition four-ball match.

Nelson, P. G. A. champion, was the only one of the four to equal par (72) in the match, played for benefit of British war relief. Hogan, defending North-South champion and leading money winner for the past two years, did no better than a 73.

Shots Go Haywire

The wind blew so cold and strong at times that all the players had difficulty keeping their shots under control. Metz, just recovering from a sinus operation, was all over the course, and Little was badly off form. Neither Metz nor Little posted a final score and Metz turned immediately to the practice tee.

The match was the highlight of warmup rounds for the 72-hole North-South which begins tomorrow, in which Hogan is such a top-heavy favorite to repeat that he's almost even money in the betting.

The field includes two Washington, D. C., professionals, Lewis Worsham, jr., and Leo Walper, and the District Amateur Champion Ralph Bogart. Walper, now private professional to Dick Chapman, National Amateur champion, has been playing steady golf all winter in Florida. Worsham's last competitive appearance was the Miami Open.

Nelson-Hogan Lead

The Nelson-Hogan combination took a two-stroke lead on the first two holes when Nelson sunk a long putt for a birdie 3 on No. 1 and both Nelson and Hogan shot par 4's on the 434-yard second. Metz, who has played in only three tournaments this winter because of illness, did his best playing of the day on No. 9. All four were off the green to the right and Metz won with a birdie 3 when he chipped dead to the pin.

On the next hole, however, Hogan sank a 6-footer to win with a birdie 4 and then won the twelfth and fifteenth with long putts to give him and Nelson the match.

Hogan, who had been a money winner in 42 consecutive tournaments, won the North-South last year with a 277—11 under par and 2 under Vic Ghezzi's course record to begin a clean sweep of the three North Carolina tournaments.

Lutheran Five Wins, 34-32

Trinity Lutheran defeated Boarding House A. C., 34-32, last night in the closest game of D. C. Recreational Department Basketball League competition.

In other games Garvin's Grill beat Happy Hollow, 42-39; Vienna A. C. whipped Fort Hunt Shamrocks, 40-30; Corner Cafe swamped Christ Church, 37-20; Marion decisioned Pinkus, 43-27; Machine Tabulation repelled Vital Statistics, 32-26; Geography shaded Population, 17-14, and Business Barons conquered Agriculture, 20-14.

Highest scorer of the evening was McCormick of Happy Hollow with 17 points.

Boston Star Sure Of Hockey Lead

Montreal, March 17 (AP).—Although there is one more game before the National Hockey League season ends, Bill Cowley, of Boston, has earned the scoring championship for 1940-41 beyond any doubt.

He has amassed 60 points on 15 goals and a record-breaking 45 assists to hold a 16-point lead over four competitors, who finished their seasons tied for second place. Syl Apps and Gordie Drillon, of Toronto, and Bryan Hextall and Lynn Patrick, of the New York Rangers, wound up with 44 points each, but whether they'll be second at the end or drop to third depends upon what Detroit's Syd Howe can do against Boston tomorrow. Howe has 43 points with one game to

Picture of the Winner in Embarrassing Spot

Patty Berg To Play Match Here April 27

Date of the exhibition match here starring Patty Berg has been set for Sunday, April 27, at Kenwood Country Club, according to an announcement made yesterday by Mrs. Walter L. Weible, president of the District Women's Golf Association.

Helen Dettweiler, the District's touring pro and former Women's Western Open champion, also will appear with two local amateurs, two-time City Champion Ralph Bogart and Roger Peacock, rounding out the foursome.

Probable pairings will be Miss Berg and Peacock against Bogart and Miss Dettweiler. The time has been tentatively set for 1:30 p. m., preceded by exhibition shots by the former national women's champion.

The match will be sponsored by the District Women's Golf Association.

Mrs. Weible also announced yesterday the entire tournament schedule of the local golf body will be announced at a meeting Thursday at Kenwood, along with the team-match program. The card will be fully as big as last year's, which set a new record for women's golf activity here.

Firpo and Boxing Protege Accept Bid for U. S. Tour

By the United Press

Buenos Aires, March 17.—After a consultation with business associates, Luis Angel Firpo and his heavyweight protege, Abel Cestac, announced today that they had decided to accept Jack Dempsey's invitation to campaign in the United States.

Firpo visited the United Press' offices and said that it would take about six months, however, to wind up his cattle business and find a tenant for his ranch. He added that Cestac needed at least six months conditioning before going on an American tour with Dempsey, Red Burman, Baltimore heavyweight, and himself.

The former heavyweight contender expressed himself as "extremely confident that the 'young Wild Bull of the Pampas' would shortly be heavyweight champion of the world." He added that he had discussed Cestac's chances with former Postmaster General Jim Farley when the latter visited him a few weeks ago.

Tom Armour, The Duke Win Nassau Match

By the Associated Press

Nassau, Bahamas, March 17.—The Duke of Windsor replaced Bobby Jones as Tommy Armour's partner in an informal golf match today, and the team handed Gene Sarazen and Walter Hagen another 3-and-2 defeat.

Armour and Jones had beaten Hagen and Sarzen by the same score in a 36-hole benefit match yesterday.

The duke dropped a 10-foot putt for a birdie deuce on the ninth hole and used his handicap strokes to help armour on three other holes.

Jones flew back to the United States yesterday to attend an Atlanta dinner tonight in observance of his thirty-ninth birthday. Sarazen and Armour returned today, but Hagen planned to stay here a week longer.

Fred Corcoran, P. G. A. tournament bureau manager, said the duke was forced to decline an invitation at this time to referee a Red Cross benefit match in the United States.

Corcoran said the British Red Cross realized about $8,000 on the match, through gallery fees and contributions.

Lew Jenkins' Fight In Garden Delayed

New York, March 17 (AP).—The Lew Jenkins-Bob Montgomery fight, scheduled for March 26 at Madison Square Garden, was postponed today until May 9 because the lightweight champion suffered a cut eye in training.

The cut was first received in Jenkins' bout with Lou Ambers and when Lew started boxing yesterday in preparation for Montgomery it was reopened. He returned to New York from his Pompton Lakes, N. J., camp today for an examination by Dr. William Walker, State athletic commission physician, who advised him to allow the wound more time to heal.

Lakeland, Fla., March 17.—Rudy York, the big Cherokee first baseman from Cartersville, Ga., blasted three home runs and a single in four times at bat to lead the Detroit Tigers to an 8-to-7 exhibition victory over the St. Louis Cardinals here today.

York homered in the second off Bill McGee, in the seventh off Newell Kimball with two men aboard, and in the ninth off Sam Nahem with one out to break a 7-7 tie and take the game. His handsome total for the day: Four runs scored, 5 batted in and 14 fielding chances without an error.

Gomez of Old

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 17 (AP).—Lefty Gomez gave two great performances today to lead the New York Yankees to a 6-to-2 exhibition victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers before 3,181 fans. He pitched two-hit ball for five innings, walking only two batsmen and granting one run. And he scored the first run of the game after nicking Curt Davis for a double in the third inning. The game was close until the eighth inning when Joe Gordon sent home three Yankee runs with a two-bagger. Joe Medwick accounted for both Brooklyn runs, sending home the first with an infield out and the second with a mighty triple to right center.

Fort Myers, Fla., March 17 (AP).—Ken Keltner's home run in the fifth inning today featured the Cleveland Indians' 4-to-3 victory over the New York Giants in an exhibition game. The Giants made ten hits to the Indians' eight, but the Tribe coupled their hits with three New York misplays.

Sam Chapman's ninth-inning homer with two runners on base produced the decisive runs for the Mackmen, who came from behind four times. The Cubs outhit the A's, 18 to 9, but the power of the American Leaguers decided the outcome.

Bantamweight Title Contender Beats Puerto Rican in Bout at Turner's

By Al Hailey

The ceiling was mighty low for Tommy Forte last night at Turner's Arena, but he glided in with a blind landing that just saved him from being knocked out of his spot as the leading contender for the world's bantamweight championship.

His left eye closed tighter than a MacTavish coin purse as early as the third round, the clever little Philadelphian came back to fight his way to a ten-round decision over Victor Corchado, dusky pretender to the Puerto Rican featherweight championship.

Tommy lost the services of his left eye when the wooly-haired Puerto Rican drove over a wild overhand right that landed in just the right spot. Before ten seconds of the third were gone, Forte couldn't see the glare of the ring lights.

Forte Carries Fight

But the hard-punching Philadelphian bored in like a rivet machine and hammered the Puerto Rican ceaselessly and carried the fight until the final bell, despite another goose egg raised under his right eye by Corchado.

An 8-to-5 underdog in the betting, Corchado brought the $788 house to its feet with a roar when he introduced the threat of an upset with his wild swing which spun Tommy half way around.

What followed, however, was a scientific boxing lesson for Corchado. In the fourth and fifth, Forte drove Corchado all over the ring with a body attack which had Victor backing away, apparently with little inclination for the fight.

Winner In Ropes

In the eighth, Corchado shoved the almost totally blinded Forte through the ropes, and he paid for it painfully in the next round when Tommy drove in a smashing left hook which exploded on Corchado's ribs like a rifle shot.

At the end, Tommy's face was badly puffed, and Corchado had a gashed cheek himself. But the fight was Forte's all the way. He made his dusky opponent fight his kind of a battle. Tommy weighed 120 pounds, and Corchado 123½.

El Brookman, Washington's perennial welterweight campaigner, stole the preliminary show but lost a heart-breaking split decision to Philadelphia's colored 147-pounder, Al Franklin.

Brookman Battered

Brookman carried the fight for the full six rounds and had Franklin hanging on, his knees sagging in the fifth. But El couldn't keep his face out of the way of Franklin's punishing left hand, and his face was a mass of blood at the end. Referee Charley Reynolds gave Brookman the decision, but Judges Eddie LaFond and Frank Schuyler ruled in favor of Franklin.

The customers were afforded a doubleheader during the 8-round semi-final when a fight broke out among the spectators and momentarily stole the show from Pedro Hernandez, 125, of Puerto Rico, and Johnny Marcilline, 121½, of Philadelphia. By the time peace reigned in the audience, the final bell had rung and Hernandez was acclaimed the winner over Johnny.

John Thomas, 130, of Philadelphia, opened the business in a four-rounder with a decision over Wilbert Reabis, 136, of Richmond, and Oscar Wright, 132, Washington, decisioned Tommy Hoover, 138, also of Washington, in a six.

Crowd Walks Out As Zivic Beats Servio Luriello

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, March 17.—Fritzie Zivic drew loud boos tonight from a crowd which began walking out in the ninth round of his first fight at home since he won the welterweight boxing title from Henry Armstrong.

Zivic, weighing 149, had little difficulty in winning the decision over Servio Turiello, 150, of Italy, in their ten-round nontitular contest, after flooring his opponent in the first round with a choppy right hand.

Thereafter, however, the bout was slow and dreary with Referee A. Graybar four times warning the champion to step on the speed.

Despite near-zero temperature, the fight drew an $8,000 house.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

POVICH

Orlando, Fla., March 17.—Faith, and 'tis a sorry day for the Irish on this St. Patrick's mornin', if they're scanning the big league rosters for their sons of the ould sod. Prophetic has been the line in one of Sir Thomas Moore's Irish melodies . . . "And hearts that once beat high for praise now feel that pulse no more." The Celts have all but slipped out of the game they pioneered in America.

Time was when Irish names choked the line-ups of the big leagues—the Delehantys, the Kellys, King and Joe; the McGraws, the Donovans, the O'Neills, the Moriartys, Hanlons and Doyles, Steve Brodie and Charley Doolin and Mickey Doolin, Cornelius McGillicuddy and Mike Donlin and Jack Doyle and Willie Keeler. Sure and it was a game for the Irish boys.

But take a look now at the American League rosters. There's Joe Cronin with the Red Sox, Billy Sullivan with Detroit and Johnny Murphy with the Yankees, and that's all there are of the Irish who once dominated the game, at least among the league's regulars.

The Celts have been supplanted by the Italians, the Slavs and, strangely, by the native Americans, who have finally gotten around to taking some leadership in their national game. But when the Irish were populating big league baseball they were pressed for numerical superiority only by the lads of German descent, who likewise have all but abandoned the game.

In cycles the various nationalities have taken to American baseball. They were represented in the game, apparently in direct proportion to their waves of immigration to the United States. Irish and German immigrants who came here as day laborers gave their sons to the game profusely. There were no lucrative jobs for the sons of those immigrants. Time was heavy on their hands and the corner lots offered entertainment. And, being of sturdy stock, they were good athletes.

But as each generation of Irish and German youths graduated from baseball, their people became more affluent. Irishmen went in for politics and the law and construction business; and the Germans entered the professions or became business men, and they sent their boys to school and college, and baseball lost its attraction for these third and fourth generation immigrants.

"Back before the turn of the Century, the Irish boys were having a tough time of it, in America" explained an octogenarian from County Connaught who was sunning himself at Tinker Field today. "I remember the 'man wanted' signs that used to have in small type 'No Irish need apply.' Many of our boys could not get into American schools because of a lack of schooling. They were the sons of the Irish people whose schools in Ireland were outlawed during the persecutions. My father's education was taught him in the hedge schools the priests would conduct on the sly on the back roads of Connaught.

"No wonder then that the Irish lads turned to baseball, where they were unhampered by the demands for an education. Their fathers were probably digging for the Union Pacific at a dollar a day, and the $1,200 or $1,500 a year a boy could earn playing baseball was big money. They went into it in droves. But as the Irish began to be successful people in America our participation in baseball declined. I remember, though, when we would hear an Irish lad in the big leagues pepping it up in the native Celtic language. He wouldn't say, 'Let's snap it up,' or anything like that. I've heard them shout, 'Faugh a ballagh!' It's the battle cry of the Irish troops from Fontenoy to the Argonne, and it meant 'Clear the way!' and there were probably a half dozen players on the team who understood what it meant."

Apparent it is that the baseball cycle at this time now embraces the Italians and the Slavs, latest of the immigrant peoples, whose boys, like the Irish and the Germans had done, are finding their way into the game in great numbers. Pipe the DiMaggios, Crosetti, Rizzuto, Camilli, Russo, Lazzeri, Pinelli, Cuccinello, Bernardino, Bilidilli, Lucadello. And the Poles, Czechs and Bohemians—Joe Kuhel, Frankie Pytlak, Pete Jablonowski, Mike Kreevich, Mike Ryba, Johnny Welaj, Steve Sundra, Mike Chartak and Joe Krakauskas. As their peoples become more affluent they, too, will send their lads into other professions in greater numbers, and baseball will return to a melting pot basis in which no nationality will dominate.

Perhaps it is because the Hebrews were fewer that they never made any great splurge in organized baseball, but that does not seem to be the case. The only Jewish player of any fame until Hank Greenberg came along 30 years later was Johnny Kling, the Cubs' catcher of the Tinker-to-Evers-to-Chance era. Greenberg is now the only Jewish lad who is a regular in the American League. Our theory is that when the Irish, German and other kids were out on the lots learning to play baseball, the Jewish boy was helping his father in the store, trying to keep down the overhead.

Baer's Boss, Prepping for Bout Here, Says Bud Likes 'Em Rough

The quotes belong to the estimable Billy McCarney, now playing nursemaid to Ancil Hoffman's two problem children at Pine Park Inn near Lakewood, N. J.—namely, Max and Buddy Baer. What's more, the quotes refer to the attitude of Buddy toward his forthcoming 15-round fight at Uline's Ice Arena with Tony Galento.

"Greetings from the training camp of the TWO BIG BAD BAERS," writes Col. McCarney, snorting with indignation that the Baer lads are said to be the most bashful boys in the fight business when it comes to getting into the ring with another hard-hitting heavyweight.

Fear Overwork

"I will have to tell you the only fear they have is that they will overwork," Honest Bill confides. "Buddy, especially, is a tiger, a killer, a man with a purpose, and I think personally that Buddy will annihilate this Double Ton bum come April 8."

McCarney's epistle was taken as definite confirmation of the ugly rumors current that the winner of the B. Baer-T. Galento brawl automatically will be elected to fight Champion Joe Louis here this summer under the Mike Jacobs-Ray Alvis banner.

Although the kid brother of the fun-loving Baer has been termed something of a joke in the fight world, Fearless Billy's enthusiasm is more intense than Barnum & Bailey.

Wants Quick End

"Personally, I am looking for a wicked, damaging battle when Tony and Buddy square away. Buddy has in mind the undoing of Tony in quicker time than it took Big Brother Max to turn back the pudgy Tony," explains Mac. "To do this job quicker, Buddy figures he will go far to proving his ability as compared with Max. There is considerable camp joshing on this point, Max claiming he softened up Galento so much that it will be an easy task for Buddy to put the finisher on the Italian in a hurry."

That is the way Sage McCarney sees this second edition of the Battle of Bums, which already is certain to draw a sell-out crowd of more than 9,000 to Uline's $700,000 ice palace in Northeast Washington.

Mickey Vernon Appears Set as Nats' No. 1 First Sacker

Archie Fails To Deliver At Orlando

Called Up From Jersey City Club, Vernon Stands Out Afield and at Bat

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Orlando, Fla., March 17.—It didn't take Mickey Vernon long. On his first day in the Washington training camp he stepped full into the first base picture. In fact, he just about obscured the opposition. He banged right onto the scene and knocked five balls far over right-field fence, leaving Manager Bucky Harris wide-eyed.

With a bat in his hand for the first time since last October, Vernon staged a terrific show. The batting-practice pitching he was facing wasn't much, but those balls he knocked out of the lot were beauteous affairs. Three of them cleared the distant gate in right center that separates Tinker Field from the adjoining high school stadium, and two of his blows rocketed on a line over the fence at the foul marker.

Right now, with his new-found power, the frail Vernon seemingly is far out in front of George Archie and Jack Sanford in the battle for the first base job. There never was any complaint with his fielding. As a first baseman, he is the best target on the club with his long-stretching ability and looseness around the bag.

Archie Proves Flop

Tonight, Harris and Clark Grimth are somewhat convinced that they almost overlooked the best first baseman they own when they neglected to call Vernon to camp here despite the impressive season he had with Jersey City in the International League. Sight unseen, they had gone all-out for Archie, the supposed hot-shot from Seattle, and were about to consign Vernon to the minors.

Following Archie's unimpressive exhibitions at bat, Harris dispatched a hurry call for Vernon, who had been balking at the Nats' salary terms. The tall, slender lad arrived in camp last night with his bride of three days, and this afternoon he quickly demonstrated that romance, or something, had been no drawback to his hitting ability.

For half of the International season last year, Vernon was the sensation of the league. He was hitting at a .350 pace and led the league for many weeks. Vernon went into a dismal batting slump in the waning weeks of the season, and finished with a mere .284. That slump was a bit alarming to the Nats' bosses.

Vernon's Slump Explained

What happened to cause such a slump in his average? Vernon says he doesn't know. "I wish I did," he says. But the fellow is modest. Bert Niehoff, manager of the Jersey City Club, explained Vernon's failure to hit late in the season.

"A bad shoulder bothered him," says Niehoff. "He hurt it taking a head first slide into second base one night, and he didn't have a free swing after that. We should have given him a rest, but he was the only first baseman we had."

Vernon has been in the Nats' training camp in two previous seasons, but he never lasted with the Nats for the trip north. In 1939 he was farmed out to Springfield in the Eastern League, and last spring Harris sent him to the Jersey City Club. But on his third try, Vernon will be a fixture with the Nats. They're afraid to release him again on the theory that he may be by far their best first baseman.

Nats Got an Eyeful

The Nats saw a lot of Vernon in the last half of the 1939 season, incidentally. He was called back from Springfield, where he had been leading the league in hitting. His fielding around first base was a welcome relief from the motley crew of first sackers who played the bag for the Nats that year, but he was no ball of fire at bat.

Vernon's batting stroke was good enough, but there didn't appear to be enough power in his frail form. Dunked in a mercury bath, he wouldn't scale over 160 pounds. He's no defensive fullback now, but he has filled out, and the 10 pounds he has added have given him extra power.

He's as clever a fielder as Archie and as fast on bases. He's a better fielder than Sanford, and more alert. Indications are that he can outhit either of his rivals. Very definitely, he's tops around first base in the Nats' camp, thus far.

For Better or Worse, All It Takes Is Four Lines of Verse:

Jingle Jugglers Set For Opening Today Of Club Contest

Dear Public:

Ordinarily I wouldn't address a letter "Dear Public.' I would just stick in a couple of carbons and save the boss the trouble of putting it in type. Let's see, I would need one copy for my relatives to pass around, one for the boys at the office, and perhaps another to tack up in Jimmy Lake's lobby.

Although I can't exactly claim them as readers, I know there are several hundred persons who have seen enough of my stuff to send in a dime for the Children's Hospital Blood Bank Fund and, in the same motion, they have joined the Walter Haight Club. I promised to conduct a contest, so if you will bear along with me this morning, I'll promise not to devote this much space to it again.

In the first place let it be known here and now that my relatives, the boys at the office and Jake are hereby disqualified, although their dimes are as good as gold for the Children's Hospital Fund.

The Walter Haight Club contest starts from the moment you read this.

Here's the dope: Write four lines of verse, jingle, or rhyme, and get the name Haight (pronounced hate) in it. It doesn't matter what you write, but please, fellows, keep it clean. It doesn't matter if the verse is for or against me, lukewarm or zero cold, funny or serius. Just write four lines, make at least two of them rhyme, and mail them in to The Haight Club Contest, The Washington Post, before midnight March 28.

The person who sends in what the judges believe is the most clever verse will receive a badge (tax paid) to the entire Bowie spring meeting, and also a ticket to the opening ball game. The second-place winner will get his choice of either a badge or a ball game ticket. The third-place winner will have to take the badge or ticket discarded by the second place winner.

The judges will be Arch McDonald, Mr. Heavy at WJSV; Art Brown, windbag extraordinary at WOL, and His Honor Ben Bane Dulaney, Sports Editor of The Washington Post.

The contest is open to all members of the Walter Haight Club. Now listen, you don't have to own a yacht, speak with an English accent or part your hair in the middle to join this organization. In addition, there are absolutely no obligations nor is there any drinking involved, despite the fact that Ray Benton, who got the Haight Club idea first, wanted it to be a drink-as-you-enter proposition.

In order to become a member of the club, simply mail one thin dime (ten cents) to the Walter Haight Club, Washington Post. The dime (every one of those ten cents) goes to a most worthy cause, the Children's Hospital Blood Bank Fund. As soon as they come from the printer's, I'm going to mail out membership cards in the self-addressed envelopes you inclose.

I suggest that you kill two stones with one bird by mailing in your dime with your entry in the contest.

Last year, a similar contest was conducted by the Bill Bennings column and the subject on that occasion was Art Brown. The contest produced some Lulu's in the way of four line verses. Unfortunately, the best one had a shady slant that just didn't belong in a newspaper or in the mail and we had to pass it up.

The winning rhyme last year went like this:

And make his way with phoey,
Perhaps, could be, a punk like me
Could win that pass to Bowie.

Get the idea? Well, you can make the play or my letters, my Florida trip or these home guard yarns I have been writing. You can bring in my weight or my relatives (no names, please) or my three chins or my little tummy. If you send in one and think you can better it, send in another, or, better still, send in three the first time.

These are not Zombies (two to a customer). A member of the Haight Club can not be restrained whether it is writing verses or telling stories. The more verses, the better.

In fact, I'm getting so enthused, I belive I'll try one:

Little Boy Haight, go blow your horn
You'll drink scotch, rye, gin and corn
Why don't you reform, you second-rater,
If you know me say nothing, I'll see you later.

Sounds like one of those five-for-a-cent valentines we used to pass around. But anyway, that's the idea.

Before signing off, I would like to report that the Washington Eagles hockey players are 100 per cent members of the Walter Haight Club. Thank you fellows and also you, Jimmy Sager, non-playing captain of the club.

Shoot the meter to me, reader.
Always your duece,
POUNDS HAIGHT.

Garden Cage Meet Opens In N.Y. Tonight

By the United Press

New York, March 17.—The strongest entry in the history of Eastern basketball—eight teams with a total of 141 victories and 13 defeats—open competition in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night in the Fourth Annual National Invitation Tournament.

Duquesne, pre-tourney favorite and runner-up last year, plays Ohio University and City College of New York goes against Virginia in the opening round. Seton Hall plays Rhode Island State and Long Island University engages Westminster in the lower bracket of the first round Wednesday night. Survivors meet in the semifinals Saturday with the final scheduled for a week from tonight.

This year's tournament has been expanded from three to four nights and from six to eight teams.

Odds To Vary

On the records of eight such exceptionally strong teams, it is difficult to choose a favorite for the team title won in 1938 by Temple, in 1939 by L. I. U., and last year by Colorado, but early betters leaned toward Duquesne and L. I. U. as probable finalists.

The "Iron Dukes," so called because they rarely use more than six men per game, have won 47 of 54 games in three seasons and 17 of 19 this season. They have an all-veteran, well-balanced lineup with Moe Becker's 161 points leading the scorers.

Long Island's tall outfit lost only to Michigan State and Duquesne during the past season for a record of 22 victories in 24 starts. Their offense is built mainly on long-range shooting accuracy with Si Lobello and Sol Schwartz leading the point-getters.

C. C. N. Y., the other local representative, may be the tourney's dark horse. The club lacks size but has talented reserves, is fast afoot and has an excellent short-passing game. Scoring aces are Sophomores Bill Holzman and Claude Phillips, who have led the team to 14 victories in 18 starts and 12 out of the last 13.

Hallmen Unbeaten

Seton Hall brings the only undefeated record to the Garden boards with 42 straight victories since 1939, including all 19 starts this season.

Virginia has turned in 31 victories in 40 games during the last two years and has come to be recognized as the best team in the South. Scoring ace is Bill Harman who has tallied 351 points for the season.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

CONSIDINE

THE BASEBALL FRONT, March 17.—Late last season the New York Giants arranged for our friend Dick Vidmer, the sportswriter who likes Bill Terry and who has courage enough to say it, to appear on the Giants radio broadcasts in the hope of deicing Chilly Willy. Then, shortly after the disastrous season closed, the club caused John McGraw to pick up a few more revolutions per minute in his grave by making inquiries regarding the hiring of a press agent. This is the pretty pass to which the once great baseball property had come—the club that once was powerful enough to keep all mention of the early Yankees out of every New York paper except a now defunct racket sheet.

Now its publicity worries are over, and in solving them the club has picked up the shadow of what was once one of the greatest catchers who ever lived. Gabby Hartnett, gyped out of his job as manager of the Cubs by an owner who had blandly promised that he would be retained, was hired for his personality more than for his catching. He was hired to humanize Bill Terry's team, to get the club back in print, to provide a dash of color in the most bloodless outfit in the big leagues, to give it a little more punch as a pinch-hitter and piece-work catcher, and to inject a little pepper into the most coldly business-like team in sports.

Gabby's presence already has had its effect. Reporters who would not tread on Giants' training territory these past few years, for fear of contracting pneumonia from the club's frosty pilot, have come to see Gabby and write about him and the Giants. There is no more talk of calling help with a view to getting the team back into print (and the customers back in the park). And until Gabby's fat, ancient legs run completely down, and his blustering good cheer gives out, there won't be any such talk.

The ironic part of this—aside from the fact that no one ever dreamed that the Giants would have to seek ways and means of getting a favorable press— is that a year or so ago Gabby himself was well on his way toward pressing Terry for the title of being the least popular manager, with reporters. Something happened to Gabby's good nature the day Wrigley made him manager of the Cubs. He went suddenly bleak and short-tempered, probably from the stress of his new responsibilities, and drove away a lot of guys who used to enjoy being around him.

But he recovered, under adversity, and once again he is the loud, expostulating, red-faced Irishman. Down at Miami he is working harder than he has worked for years. He reported to camp 20 pounds lighter than he has been for a long time, and sees no reason why he shouldn't catch 50 or 60 games this year and pinch-hit in as many more. Of course he can't run a lick, but he can still hit that ball. That's about the last thing that evaporates in a ballplayer.

He was always a good hustler, but he has a yen this year to turn in an exceptional season. In his heart he's sore as a boil at the way he was treated in Chicago. Wrigley fired him a few weeks after assuring him and the Chicago fans and newspapers that there would be no change made in the Cubs' management. He was fired on the loose charge of incompetence, but he got a minimum of cooperation from Wrigley in the way of players. In the heat of the 1940 season he had only six pitchers. His aces, Lee and Bryant, sloughed off badly and Wrigley's $185,000 floperoo, Dean, was useless. You can rest assured that the club Wrigley provided for him was in utterly desperate shape by the fact that it hired Zeke Bonura. To preserve a measure of the Cub's good will, after the flop, Wrigley had to blame somebody and Hartnett was it. That's why he'll give a little more to the Giants this year, and, brother, they'll need it.

For they have another bad second division ball club. The players Terry inherited from McGraw (and used very nicely, of course) are washed up, and Bill hasn't been able to develop any responsible replacements. The club is not sound enough financially to do any serious bidding for the players cast on the open market by the scavenger clubs of the league, as witness the great need (and inability to buy) Kirby Higbe. It looks like another woeful year for what once was the utter monarch of New York baseball—and it will take a lot of Hartnett's gusty charm to keep 'em coming through the turnstiles.

Hank Danning isn't going to be another Hank Greenberg in that outfield. Abe Lyman, a fan is around Miami offering to bet money likely. Terry has gone on record in making Danning an outfielder and Bill isn't one to give up easily on his fixations. Danning will stay out there until he is skulled by fly balls. And Hartnett, we suspect, will in time succeed Terry as field manager when Bill finally gains that Danning will start the season behind the bat, but that's not legal, as well as actual, control of the Giants corporation.

Tom Hunter Leads Bowlers At Penn

Tom Hunter, Station Engineering, had highs of 147-406 in the Kilowatt League at Penn Recreation that helped his team to the big set with a 1,737 count. Charles Edwards, official scorer, had an even 400 big count. It was the first time either Hunter or Edwards totaled 400 or better for individual sets. The Sales No. 1 team took the game with a nice 608.

Peggy Steer, Meteors, sparked the Ice Palace Ladies meet with high single of 131 while the set high was taken by Pauline Ford with 350 which helped her Doves quintet to high game of 511. The Woodpeckers were best for the set after totalling 1,461, which included all three from the Orioles. The Meteors scored a clean sweep over the Cardinals. Doves and Woodpeckers are tied for league leadership with the Eagles next.

Miss Hiser Leads

Caroline Hiser, Heinicke Delicatessen, led the Prince Georges Ladies League at Hyattsville Recreation with top totals of 136 and 371 which aided her quintet in taking team highs with 544 and 1,478. Anglin Bros. took three straight from the All-Stars, while Cheries Beauty Salon scored a sweep over Sellers Sales.

Frank Burgess, Columbia No. 1, had high game of 144 in the Odd Fellows play at Brookland but he had to divide set honors with Harold Hodges, Golden Rule, as both rolled 382. Burgess' highs, along with Fred Sonneman's 372, led his quintet to top set of 1,785 and three games over Friendship No. 1 to put them in a tie with the latter for the third spot. Mount Pleasant won high team game with a 618 count and three from opponents to make it 29 wins out of the last 30 starts. Golden Rule won three from Amity No. 2 and are out in front by six games.

Joe Wood Paces Team

Miss Sarsfield, Marge's Beauty Salon, was the star of the Arlington Ladies League at Arlington Bowling Center as her top scores of 129-339 led her quintet to team highs of 558 and 1,483, both totals season records formerly held by Arlington Village Beauty Salon.

The Prince Georges Fire Department League at Hyattsville Recreation was led by Joe Wood, Glenndale, whose 127 top game and 360 set helped win all three from Bladensburg and take high team set of 1,603 as well. The league-leading Riverdale Heights quintet took high game with a 557 pinfall.

H. Hoffecker was top man for game in the Takoma Church League with a 140 count while Cy Sidell, Christian, inspired his quintet to team highs of 559 and 1,603 with his own big set of 379. Catholic No. 2 whipped the Catholic No. 1 boys three straight to take the league lead from them and now are in front by one game. Christian also won three games, sweeping the Baptist boys aside.

Virginia Miller, St. Francis de Sales team in the Sodality League at New Recreation, was the leading lady for the night as her highs of 144-350 helped her team to top totals of 534 and 1,527.

Williamsburg, Va., March 17 (AP). Thirteen men reported today for the first official drill of William and Mary's 1941 baseball squad. Light batting practice, bunting and fielding featured the workout, which was directed by Coach Rube McCray.

McCray said he planned to continue the drills along the same lines most of this week, possibly staging the first intrasquad game Saturday.

Regal Five Takes Heurich League Crown

Regal Clothiers won the third and decisive game in the Heurich Cup League playoff series last night, beating Adam Hats, 53-45, in Heurich gym.

The favored Regals, second-half and defending champions, and the Hatters, first-half winners, had split the first two games of the final series.

Gerald Burns and Acky Viani led a consistent Regal attack that netted a double-score lead of 36-18 at half time. Adam Hats cut the could not overcome the big lead.

Burns and Viani each scored 18 points while high-scorer Murrell Heddings returned to action for the losers and accounted for an even dozen points.

Arlington Macabees defeated Tucker A. C., 49-46, in a preliminary.

Cornell Gives Up On Boxing as Varsity Sport

By the Associated Press

Ithaca, N. Y., March 17.—Cornell today announced the dropping of boxing as an intercollegiate varsity sport and the expansion of an intramural program in charge of Coach Allie Wolff.

The announcement said provision would be made for intramural champions to meet the intramural titleholders of other schools. The change was made to permit more students to participate in the sport, heretofore concentrated in the development of varsity material.

Pointer Wins Puppy Stake

By the Associated Press

Orange, Va., March 17.—Steincity Jim Boy, a liver and white pointer owned by R. Z. Cates, of Spartanburg, S. C., won the Puppy Stake in the annual spring trials of the Virginia Amateur Field Trial Association today.

The Puppy Stake and three of the nine braces of the all-age stake were run today over Bracketts and adjoining plantations in upper Louisa County, some 15 miles south of Orange. High cold winds, howling over the rolling Piedmont Virginia fields, made birds difficult to find.

Second place in the Puppy Stake was won by Bobo, a lemon and white pointer owned by L. E. Alford, of Petersburg. Third was taken by Shenvalinda, a setter bitch belonging to Virgil Hawse, of Staunton. Eighteen puppies competed in the event. Hundleys Jack Doone, owned by Dr. Dean Hundley, jr., of Wallace, N. C., was adjudged the best junior puppy.

Cates, who is handling his own entries, is bidding in the all-age for permanent possession of the trophy on which he now holds two legs. He captured the event in 1939 with Maplerock Jake and in 1940 with Steincity Joe. He needs to win a third time to gain permanent possession.

Postscripts . . .

Orlando, Fla., March 17.—Bucky Harris has pasted on the dressing-room wall the page of a weekly picture magazine which describes the Nats as the worst team in the American League. . . . Harris hopes it will have the proper psychology. . . . Author of the piece is Bill Stern, radio announcer, who notes strangely, that Washington hasn't had a good third baseman since Buddy Lewis went to the outfield. . . . Somebody ought to tell him that Lewis was transferred to the outfield because he wasn't playing much third base . . . and notify him also that Lewis is now back in the infield. . . . Stern also came up with the bright statement that Sid Hudson and Rick Ferrell are the only two good ball players on the team. . . . Harris was a bit disgusted today when one of his better-looking young pitchers, Hardin Cathey, came up with a sore arm. . . . Since they have taken over the promotion of their own exhibition games at Tinker Field, keeping all the admissions, the Nats are making more money than the $3,500 flat sum they were guaranteed by the Orlando Chamber of Commerce in previous seasons. . . . First Baseman Jimmy Vernon bashfully refused to register at the Nats' hotel with the bride he took last Friday, and found other quarters in Orlando. . . . He married a school day sweetheart. . . . If the Nats could get Jimmy Pofahl by the other clubs in the league on waivers, they could sell him to the Detroit Tigers, who are interested. . . . But because of the rule forbidding the pennant-holding Tigers from making trades, waivers are necessary. . . . Any day now, Dutch Leonard will be throwing his knuckle ball. . . . It has been a long and tedious procedure for him to develop the necessary callouses on his finger tips. . . . Dopey Dean's new-found knuckle ball may win him a job on the Nats' pitching staff, incidentally . . . Buddy Lewis has been told to stop trifling with a no whatting stance and stick to the style that netted him a .317 average last year. . . . He is showing new interest in the third base job he did not want last winter.—POVICH.

Sirasia, Carrying a $66.60 Price, Wins at Tropical Park

Votum Bows To Sickle T. For Place

Odds-On Favorite Forced to Battle For Second Place Behind Long Shot

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., March 17.—Sirasia, a 5-year-old son of Sir Gallahad III owned by W. C. Stroube, provided one of the highlights of the St. Patrick's Day program when he won the featured event named after the Patron Saint and paid off at $66.60 here today. Piloted by Apprentice Donald MacAndrews (and that is Scotch spelling), the long shot clicked by a length and a half, running the mile an a sixteenth in 1:43 2-5 over the lightning fast strip.

Mrs. B. F. Whitaker's Sickle T., the odds-on favorite, had a hard time finishing second, a half length before Mrs. H. G. Good's Votum.

Green ties and other articles of clothing sprinkled with the Irish hue were seen all through the crowd. Even the programs were printed in green ink today. The events had Irish names, and appropriate tunes were played by the band throughout the afternoon. But neither form players nor Irish in the throng could find a reason for backing the surprising Sirasia.

Sickle T., which closed at 3 to 5, dashed into a daylight lead, with Votum and the suddenly improved Sirasia closest on the trail. Sickle T. allowed Votum to sLoot past him and open up nearly two lengths advantage around the last bend, then Sirasia also streaked by. The latter put Votum away and pulled away. Votum faltered badly.

RIPTED CLOUDS forced a fast pace from the start, raced CALORY into defeat in the first half mile, drew out entering the stretch, but went lame and stopped suddenly and just lasted. HIGHSCOPE, prominent throughout, closed gamely to punishment and would have won in another stride. CALORY displayed high early speed, but then faltered in the sixteenth run. He also pulled up lame.

SICKLE T. held the field safe for speed, was taken back off the pace midway around the turn, then swung to the outside in the final furlong and finished with a rush. VOTUM, a keen contender, assumed command on the stretch turn, but faltered in the final drive.

KAHYRITE stumbled at the start, dropped far out of contention the first half mile, gained rapidly while saving ground entering the stretch, wore the leaders down and won going away. BONIFIED, a forward contender throughout, responded to punishment when the real test came and outlasted ALCINOUS. The latter displayed good speed, but ran out entering the stretch and lost much ground.

SUPREME CHANCE opened up a big lead rounding the first turn, was then rated, but tired in the last furlong.

Selections at Tropical Park

Dear Al.

They call it racing, but I call it murder. So let's forget Florida and talk about Bowie. I was out there yesterday and it looked like the meeting was going to open tomorrow instead of two weeks from today. More than 500 horses in the stalls and on the track. That's about 300 more than generally are around two weeks before the meeting, according to Dick Pending, the track superintendent. Three carloads got in from California, including for the most part those of Trainers Guy Bedwell and Yancey Christmas. There are plenty of jockeys around, too, including Washington's own Eddie Smith, who is working for Bill Norton. The half-mile boys are there in droves, exercising horses. I missed Johnny Shanks and was told that he is now a foreman at Camp Meade and has given up the race track. You can bet me on that. Although he probably would be better off, Johnny most likely will be back before summer, if I know my jockeys. Henri Mora, who did some fine riding around here last year as long as the officials weren't suspending him, was on the scene but didn't do any work. Mora was dressed in a big expensive auto. He waved and shot me the latin equivalent of "I'll see you April 1." Alan Clarke had the colt, Walter Haight, on the oval, but the youngster pulled himself up every time he passed the track kitchen. Tommy Coucci, cousin of Silvio Coucci onetime saddle star, was riding Walter Haight. Tommy still has the apprentice allowance and might be a boy worth remembering if you have to hire a rider. Straty Patterson, who claims he is the No. 1 exercise boy in America, is training a 2-year-old in addition to galloping horses. The track was in remarkable shape, at least "good," despite that heavy snow last week. "Dynamite" Kerr is there and has been there all winter. Both he and his horses look good. See you on the rail in two weeks. BILL.

First race—ELECTRIC found a field he could whip at Hialeah and this could be the spot for another winning effort. I'm going to string along. BESIQUE is reported to be a fair sort and may take the place. ALL GLEE to take the show end.

Second race—NO ENDING has shown flashes of that old form and could be the right one in this field. Conditions suit and I'm going to be there. MIXWELL has shown good races and belongs close with these. AIRLAP for the minor award.

Third race—VICTORY BOUND should go well in company of this caliber. The race is rather open and all he needs is the right handling. HARVENED and LEWISTON to account for the place and show positions.

Fourth race—MOONFOLLY appears best in this field. Has the speed and is fit as hands make horses. HIGH PLAID deserves plenty of attention and will be a keen factor. WISE ROBIN may shuffle into the money.

Fifth race—TECHNICIAN gets the highest figure in this field. Promises to do a lot of running, and I'm going to take my chances. SUN INPLAY was a recent winner for us annd should be close up. MAR LE probably will account for third money.

Sixth race—PAUL PRY appears capable of turning back these. He is honest and may lead DANCING LIGHT and BROWN BOMB to the wire. Everything seems to point that way.

Seventh race—SOLDIER'S CALL has something on the opposition in this event. Likes the route. NAVARIN comes from a good barn and should go well. CHANCE RAY for the show end.

Eighth race—CONSUL, YOUNG COUNTY and NOODLES is the way I prefer them in the day's finale. However, it is a close fit all along the line.

Best bet—Paul Pry.

Gonzaga Meets LaSalle, N. Y. High

Locals Play In Catholic School Event

Play Opens Thursday In Eastern States Court Tournament; Durham Basket Notes

By Bill Burnett

Gonzaga High, whose basketball representatives own the Metropolitan Scholastic Championship of Washington, will meet LaSalle High School, of New York City, in the first round of the Eastern States Catholic Tournament in Newport, R. I., it was announced by the pairings committee yesterday.

The game will be the first of three days of play, starting Thursday at 4 p. m. At 5 o'clock Central Catholic, of Pittsburgh, will tangle with Benedictine Military High, of Richmond, and other first-day games starting at 8 p. m. will see De La Salle, of Newport, face Chaminade High, of Mineola, Long Island, and Catholic High, of Trenton, N. J., against Catholic High, of Joliet, Ill.

Locals Leave Today

Gonzaga's team, headed by Father George Bahlman, S. J., supervisor of athletics, and Coach Irvine (Horse) Holbrook, will leave Washington tomorrow by train at 1 p. m. The Purple will remain for the duration of the meet, no matter how they fare, leaving Newport Sunday morning.

Ten players will represent the District in the tourney, led by All-Metropolitan Ace Bobby Mulvihill. They wil probably include Franny Counselman, high scorer of the club; Hart Downs, Bernie Nolan, Joe O'Lone, Buddy Rowzee, Bobby Lauck, Tom Whelan, Jack Walsh and Reds Murphy.

Roosevelt Five Feted Tomorrow

Roosevelt High, another highly successful cage season behind it, will stage its victory dinner tomorrow night at the school cafeteria, at 6 o'clock. . . . It's the second one in a row at which the Riders have celebrated two basketball titles. . . . Last year they boasted the interhigh and metropolitan crowns, this year the interhigh and Southern Scholastic in Durham, N. C. . . . Toast of the banquet will certainly be Capt. Hymie Perlo, who was named the outstanding player in the Durham event, as well as on the all-tournament team. . . . Frankie Ciango and Tomy Robertson also will come in for much praise, particularly the former, who, according to all experts, was the victim of the tourney's big "steal"—not being named on the all-tournament team. . . . He only scored 30 points in three games and had every man he was assigned to guard almost crying in futility. . . . Officials gave Perlo credit for 21 points, though he actually scored only 19. . . . One of the baskets Perlo was allowed was scored by Dick Goodman on a freak play in which it appeared a Boys High player, of Atlanta, Ga., slapped the ball in. . . . Only player in the meet who failed to score a single point three games was Roosevelt's George Robertson. . . . The fine showing of Reserves Dick Goodman and Les Wicklein, both converted gridmen, was almost as much responsible for Roosevelt's triumph as the playing of its regulars.

Oxon Hill High Plays Host to Foul Shooters

Seven schools, including some of the most talented youngsters in Maryland, today will compete in the second annual Foul-Shooting tournament at Oxon Hill School. The first ball will be thrown at 2 p. m.

Besides the host school, entries will be Hyattsville, Greenbelt, Mount Rainier, Marlboro, Maryland Park and Bowie.

A variation in last year's setup in the meet will be tried this season, a single performer in boys' and girls' divisions being allowed from each school instead of four. Last year Bowie won the boys' class and Hyattsville the girls' class.

Winners in the respective brackets will be awarded miniature gold basketballs by Principal T. S. Gwynn, of Oxon Hill. A reception will be staged by Oxon Hill following the tourney.

Hockey Fans Honor Burrage, Anderson Tonight

Hockey Stars Figure in Strange Drama As Eagles Seek to Clinch Walker Cup Series

By Jack Munhall

A strange drama of ice hockey will be enacted tonight at Riverside Stadium as the Washington Eagles, newly crowned Eastern Amateur League champions, continue their drive to clinch the Walker Cup Series in a match with the Boston Olympics.

Leading characters in the drama are Coach Redvers Mackenzie and Defenseman Len Burrage, of Washington, and Defenseman Ty Andersen, of Boston. To Burrage and Andersen Mackenzie will present testimonials of honor from Washington fans in appreciation of their parts in the winning of the league title.

Not hard to understand is the reason Burrage is being honored, for he has for two years been the backbone of the Washington club. But to realize why Andersen, a rival player, should be lauded by local fans requires knowledge of a peculiar tale.

Coach Wanted Andersen

Two years ago when Mackenzie, then coach of the Atlantic City Sea Gulls, was hired by Washington to direct the city's first organized ice hockey team, he at once sought to sign Andersen as a nucleus for the new squad. Andersen had been Mackenzie's greatest defenseman at Atlantic City back in 1931 and 1932 and Red considered his experience and ability very highly. Just the man, thought Mackenzie, to steady the young team he was planning to assemble. But at the last moment Andersen pulled out on Mackenzie and joined the Boston Olympics.

It was then that Mackenzie, in desperation, prevailed upon S. G. Leoffler, manager of the Eagles, to undertake great expense in bringing Burrage, a former Eastern League standout, back to this country from England, where he was having success as a player-manager.

What Burrage has done for Washington since is history. He led the Eagles into second place last year in the team's first season in the league, and this year he sparked them to the title.

Best Against Orioles

At this juncture Andersen pops back into the story. For not only was Andersen indirectly responsible for Washington having Burrage, the man who led them to a championship, but he, more than any other rival player in the league, actually helped the Eagles dethrone the Baltimore Orioles. Main reason why Baltimore did not repeat this year as league champion is the Boston Olympics who whipped the Orioles no fewer than seven times. And main reason why the Olympics whipped the Orioles seven times is Andersen, who always seemed to be at his best against the Baltimore team.

So it is that Burrage and Andersen, who might have been defense teammates with Washington, teamed up anyhow to help the Eagles win the crown.

The Eagles, having clinched the league title by running up a seven-point lead over the Orioles, need a victory and a tie to insure them the Walker Cup. With the Hershey Cup already in their possession, the Eagles by taking the Walker silverware would grab off two of the three cups offered for league competition. The other, the Boardwalk Trophy, was won by Baltimore.

Near Walker Cup

Though Washington holds a convincing edge of eight victories and three ties in 12 meetings this season with the Olympics, the records show that more often and not the teams have waged thrilling battles. Only once in the 12 games did Washington beat Boston by more than three goals. That lone exception was an 8-3 licking the Eagles handed the Olympics here. Moreover, three times in their last five matches the Olympics held the Eagles to overtime ties.

The Bears made three runs with four hits against starter Larry Powell in the first inning, when Ed Levy doubled with the bases filled. Bill Rutland, who relieved Powell, held the Bears to two hits during his three-inning turn on the mound.

Pirates Scuttled

San Bernardino, Calif., March 17 (AP).—Hanson's sixth-inning single off Rookie Lloyd Dietz with the bases loaded scored two runners today and gave the Los Angeles Angels a 3-to-2 triumph over Pittsburgh's Pirates.

Manager Frankie Frisch used 21 players, and the Angels called on 18. Southpaw Johnny Gee, 6-foot-9-inch rookie, looked good in the three frames he pitched, permitting but one hit, fanning one and passing one batter.

Los Angeles (P. C.)	000	012	000	3	9 0
Pittsburgh (N.)	110	000	000	2	8 2

Stine, Fallon (4) and Holm, Hernandez (6); Gee, Dietz (3), Lanahan (6) and Lopez, Schultz (3).

Weatherly Signs

Cleveland, March 17 (AP).—Roy Weatherly, last of the Cleveland Indians' holdouts, has signed a one-year contract, the baseball club announced today.

Weatherly had been holding out for a two-year contract. Frank Kohlbecker, Tribe business manager, indicated the outfielder received a raise over his 1940 salary. The Pineland, Tex., player batted .303 last season.

Browns Weary

San Antonio, Tex., March 17 (AP). The St. Louis Browns returned to their training base here today from an exhibition trip south of the border too tired to even talk baseball.

Helping demonstrate the American brand of baseball at its best—and worst—to the southern neighbors, the Brownies won two games and lost one to the Boston Bees in a series played at Monterrey, Mexico, over the weekend.

The players didn't have an idle minute while in Mexico and brought back stacks of souvenirs, ranging from saddles to perfume, for their families and friends.

The Browns-Bees series will be resumed here Wednesday.

Cubs May Trade Leiber

Tucson, Ariz., March 17 (AP).—Hank Leiber, the hard-hitting outfielder, said today he had despaired of coming to terms with the Chicago Cubs.

"I expect they'll put through some kind of a deal with another club for me within a few days," he said.

Leiber, a perennial holdout, has been at odds with the Cubs management over salary. It recently was disclosed he might be traded back to the New York Giants.

Recovered from a tonsilectomy, Leiber resumed training today to make up for his absence from camp.

Brewers Meet Bruins Under College Rules

Collegiate rules will goven the competition Thursday night when the Washington Brewers inaugurate their three-game District profressional basketball championship series against the Washington Bruins at Riverside Stadium at 8:30 o'clock.

The collegiate game, it is believed, will open up the play and eliminate much of the unecessary roughness and pulling and hauling made possible through the professional brand of basketball. The Bruins have been playing collegiate rules all season.

The Bruins will have Wilmeth Sidat-Singh, former Syracuse University basketball and football star and now with the original New York Renaissance in the line-up.

Frostburg's Cage Record One of Best In Maryland

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frostburg, Md., March 17.—The record of the floor team of Frostburg State Teachers College, handicapped by the small enrollment of 68 male students, was among the best in Maryland for the season just closed. The Mountaineers, who won 14 of 22 games, had the State's No. 1 individual scorer in Johnny Meyers, who gathered 363 points.

While the record is not quite to that of last year—17 victories and 4 defeats—this year's team may be classed as equal to, if not better than, that quint.

Coach Carrington's boys carried off three State honors—total points scored, 1,134; highest average of points per game, 51.5, and leading individual scorer, Meyers. Athey, brilliant freshman passer from Allegany High, Cumberland, was second with 188. Coach Carrington rates Athey as the best basketball prospect in the State.

Trenton Reviews Application for Horse Race Track

By the Associated Press

Trenton, N. J., March 17.—The State Racing Commission studied again today George A. Hamid's application to operate a horse race track with pari-mutuel betting at the Trenton State Fair Grounds, but postponed action until Commissioner William H. Cane's return from Florida, expected this week.

Hamid, owner of the fair grounds property in adjacent Hamilton Township, was instructed to stake out his proposed 1-mile oval so the commissioners could see the physical setup clearly.

Hamid has told the commission he would spend $300,000 in lengthening the track, used mostly for harness racing so far, from a half mile to a mile; improving the grandstand, erecting several buildings and landscaping the grounds.

Chisox Get Holiday

Pasadena, Calif., March 17 (AP).—Manager James J. Dykes, a fighting Irishman if there ever was one, observed St. Patrick's day by giving the Chicago White Sox a holiday from spring training drills.

The influenza-suffering players were reported much better.

Classy Field In Semifinals Of AAU Bouts

Reputation boxers fresh from the Eastern Amateur Golden Gloves championships in New York will be featured in senior bouts tomorrow night when the District Amateur Athletic Union's tournament rolls into the semifinals with 22 outstanding bouts at Turner's Arena at 8 o'clock.

Twelve senior and ten novice bouts will be offered and will involve one of the finest fields ever to grace an amateur boxing tournament in this area.

Bill Mulligan, chairman of the District of Columbia A. A. U.'s Boxing Committee, yesterday announced that prices for tomorrow night's semifinal bouts and Friday night's championship finals will be advanced to 85 cents and $1.55, although only 25 cents will be required of children under 16.

Sullivan Starred

Outstanding in the senior events will be the tournament debut of Bob Sullivan, hard-hitting Police Boys Club No. 5 heavyweight, against Bob Noland, of the Merrick Boys Club. Sullivan recently stole the show in the New York Golden Gloves when he lost a disputed decision to Charley Burley in the semifinal feature of the tournament. Afterward he was awarded a beautiful ruby ring in recognition of his achievement and also was cited as one of the most popular competitors in the field.

Sullivan, champion of the District Golden Gloves Tournament, may be in for the battle of his life, however, when he meets Noland, who recently won the District Golden Gloves heavyweight title in the novice class and is considered by many a shiftier lad with as much ability as Sullivan.

Another sparkling heavyweight bout in the senior class finds Wilbur Mason, who upset Jackie Cranford to win the Golden Gloves light-heavyweight title, matched with Norman Pemberton, experienced and capable representative of the Merrick Club.

Petros to Show

Joe and Danny Petro, who boxed in the Eastern Golden Gloves championships in New York, will be joined by Brother Jim, a novice, in a bid to advance to the championship finals. All reached the finals in the District Golden Gloves tourney, but only Joe came through with a title.

Joe steps out against classy little Dick Mullens, of National Training School, in the senior flyweight feature, while Danny boxes Joe Gannon, of the Apollo A. C. Brother Jim Petro, who boxed as a heavyweight in the Golden Gloves, steps down into the light heavyweight class to meet Bill Mansfield, also of the Apollo A. C.

Other highly regarded seniors who will answer the bell tomorrow night are Bernie Cady, Lewis Hanbury, Leo Marcopolus, Frankie McCaleb, Walter Thomas, Tony DeToto, Alan Shreve, Bernie Cook, Bill Purdy, Jackie Cranford and Bill Smith.

U. S. Aircraft Exports Spurt

This is one of a series of articles designed to inform the public of the progress being made by American industry in providing the weapons for national defense. The facts presented have been gathered in surveys of leading defense industries and from other authoritative sources.

How American airplane manufacturers accomplished the gigantic task of increasing production 1,000 per cent in three years is one of the great industrial stories of our times.

Executing a sharp turn about from making peace-time planes to ships of war, the industry has hiked its production figure from 100 planes a month in 1938 to 1,046 in January, 1941. By the middle of 1942, according to present schedules, that figure will have jumped again to 2,500.

How was an industry geared to the production of commercial and private planes able to do the job.

The answer is many sided, but in the main the builders of American planes did it by huge expansions of plant and installation of new machinery, training new workers and subcontracting for the manufacture of airplane parts in plants throughout the country.

In September, 1939, at the outbreak of the war in Europe, productive floor space in the industry totaled 10,000,000 square feet. Today the figure is 25,000,000 with 20,000,000 more under construction. In 1939, the industry employed 36,000 workmen. Today, more than 180,000 are at work, and by next September it is estimated that the industry will have a total of 382,000 workers on the pay rolls. In the year just before the war, the output of the industry—including planes, engines, and propellers—amounted to $125,000,000. In 1940, it was more than $500,000,000, and during the coming 18 months it is estimated that the volume will soar to $3,000,000,000.

America's aircraft makers are meeting the many problems of speedy production in the face of many difficulties, not the least of which is the necessity for improving design in fighting, bombing, and training planes with an eye to the progress of the aerial war abroad. Military planes must be up-to-the minute in design—and in many cases forerunners of new design—but the tempo of production still must increase rather than wane. For the present program calls for the construction of 37,000 military planes—21,000 for the American armed forces and 16,000 for the British—by the middle of 1942. And new orders from both sides of the Atlantic may increase the total demand to 61,000 planes of all types.

Under the spur of this unprecedented call for production, under the urgency of America's defense effort, the airplane industry has managed to key itself to the new pace, the pace, in the words of Defense Director William S. Knudsen, of "speed, speed, and still more speed."

Grease Wool Market Opens In New York; Trade Lively

By the Associated Press

New York, March 17.—Three-quarters of a million pounds of wool still attached to sheep's hides "changed hands" today in the Nation's newest market—the grease wool futures division of the New York Cotton Exchange.

This is enough wool to furnish the uniforms for 5,000 United States soldiers, and present operations of the textile industry indicate all the wool traded today may be devoted to Army use. (Wool men say it takes 146 pounds of grease wool to supply the uniform requirements of one American doughboy.)

Trading on future deliveries of grease wool, which is the product just as it is shorn from sheep and before processing, began at noon.

Frank J. Knell, president of the wool associates, a division of the cotton exchange, and J. H. Mehl, chief of the Federal Commodity Exchange Administration, took part in the ceremony opening the new market.

Mehl asserted the new futures market would give wool growers more opportunity to participate in trading and said: "While future trading in grease wool does not come under the Commodity Exchange Act, the Commodity Exchange Administration looks with favor on the adoption of the new type of contract."

Kneel bought the first contract—6,000 pounds—for May delivery at 97 cents a pound. Other contracts were placed at 95 cents a pound for July delivery and at 94 cents a poud for arrival in October.

Before the final bell rang, 121 contracts had been bought and sold, with all but the October delivery slipping in price. May closed at 96.3 cents bid and July closed at 94.8 bid. In neither case were sellers willing to trade at those prices.

The grease wool prices consistently ranged 23 to 28 cents below prices on like months for "wool tops," the semi-processed wool which had been traded on a futures basis for many years. The spread represents the cost of cleaning and otherwise processing wool before it can be converted into yarn.

Merchants & Miners Makes Stock Offer

Baltimore, March 17 (AP).—The Merchants & Miners Transportation Co., in a letter to shareholders, has offered to purchase up to 20 per cent of the outstanding shares of the company at $25 a share—a purchase that would involve an expenditure of $1,174,900.

There are 234,980 shares of capital stock outstanding and the company is prepared to purchase 46,996. The shares, which are listed on the Baltimore Stock Exchange, were quoted today at 23⅞.

Chicago Livestock

Chicago, March 17 (AP).—Sharply cut marketings as a result of the cold wave sent hog prices soaring 10 to 25 higher today and brought the highest dressed pork price in nearly a month.

Salable arrivals were limited to 13,000 hogs and producers shipped only 1,000 additional head to leader packers.

SALABLE HOGS—Receipts, 13,000; total, 14,000; closed fairly active, 15 to 25 higher full advance on light and underweight; good and choice, 180-340 pounds, 7.90@8.15; top, 8.20; 240-270 pounds, 7.80@8.10; 270-330 pounds, 7.55@7.90; sows, 15 to 20 higher; 400-500 pounds, 6.90@7.15; few lightweights, 7.25 and above.

Boston Wool

Boston, March 17 (AP) (U. S. Department of Agriculture).—A few inquiries were being received for domestic wools in Boston today. Demand was mostly for the fine territory and Texas wools in original bags. An occasional sale of fine combing Ohio delaine was reported at 43 to 44 cents in the grease. Fine wools from Australia and South America were receiving a steady demand at firm prices.

Cotton Weakest As Commodity Futures React

By the Associated Press

The rapid March climb in commodity futures prices was halted in part by a sharp reactionary swing yesterday in a number of domestic items, notably cotton, hides and rubbers.

Buying activities continued to dominate the foreign sector and quotations for Santos coffee, Straits tin and silk extended recent gains.

Cash markets lost none of their buoyancy. The Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot staples rose to the highest since November 6, 1937, at 79.38 per cent of the 1926 average from 79.16 per cent Saturday.

Cotton contracts retreated 95 cents to $1.45 a bale; rubber closed unchanged to .27 of a cent a pound lower, and hides gave up .22 to .33 of a cent a pound. Cottonseed oil, cocoa and copper futures also were marked down.

Traders paid .15 to .19 of a cent a pound above Saturday's quotations for Santos coffee contracts. Straits tin was bid up .10 to .15 of a cent a pound. The domestic and world sugar contracts advanced to new high levels for the current upturn.

Chicago wheat closed ¾ to 1⅛ cents a bushel lower. Corn was ⅛ lower to ⅛ higher.

34 Cotton Firms Earn $22,532,075 in 1939

By the Associated Press

The Federal Trade Commission reported last night that 34 of the largest cotton textile manufacturers had combined net income before interest and taxes of $22,532,075 for 1939, representing a return of 6.5 per cent on capital.

After deduction of expenses and other items there was a net profit from manufacturing and trading of 4.9 cents from every dollar of sales. Total inventories of the companies amounted to $119,610,148 at the end of the year.

Britain Seen Involved In Anaconda Sale

New York, March 17 (AP).—A block of 140,000 shares of common stock of Anaconda Copper Mining Co., believed to have originated from British sources, was sold over the counter today after the Stock Exchange closed. Blyth & Co, Inc., which made the distribution, set the price at $24.62½ a share, the closing market quotation.

New York Dry Goods

New York, March 17 (AP).—Some large mills withdrew from the cotton cloth market today pending a settling of price ranges. Quotations generally were unchanged, but the tendency was upward and a premium of ½ cent a yard was paid on popular prints for spot delivery.

Buyers of men's wear in the woolen piece goods trade now find it difficult to obtain goods even from jobbers. Prices were firm and unchanged from the best levels of the current move.

Although a tight delivery situation in rayon goods restricts volume of sales, moderate business was done in spun yarn cloths and pigment taffetas. Prices were strong and premiums were paid on popular items wherever spot deliveries were possible.

Silk remained neglected.

Utility Preferred Stocks Rise Substantially As General List Backs and Fills Aimlessly

New York, March 17.—Senior utility issues pushed up as much as 3 points in today's stock market but many leaders were unable to extend the weekend rally. Steels and shipbuildings led an early advance, then backed away. Rails, motors, coppers, rubbers and mail orders failed to get anywhere in particular.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 41.7. Dealings picked up for a while in the forenoon, but slackened as prices wavered. Transfers totaled 378,350 shares compared with 320,014 last Friday.

Utility company preferreds apparently reflected the brightening outlook for this industry as power needs expand in line with heavier defense spending. Favorable earnings reports brought in modest bidding for individual stocks.

On the other hand, thoughts of mounting taxes continued as a speculative handicap and many potential buyers seemingly held aloof because of the cloudier war picture and fears this country might become actually involved in the conflict.

This week's steel mill operations advanced to a new record high but Bethlehem was the only prominent stock in this group to emerge with a plus sign. United States Steel and Youngstown Sheet both finished under water. Part of the diffidence exhibited here was attributed to possible labor difficulties.

Anaconda ended unchanged at 24⅝ and the investment banking firm of Blyth & Co. offered 140,000 shares of this issue for private purchase after the close at the final quotation. The block was understood to have represented British holdings.

Market analysis saw a further recovery signal in the statement of Defense Production Chief Knudsen that the $7,000,000,000 British aid and other arms contracts would necessitate an increase in industrial activity of 50 per cent.

Among senior share climbers, some of which got into new high territory for the year, were those of Electric Power & Light, Standard Gas & Electric, General Gas, American & Foreign Power and Columbia Gas.

Preferreds of Mullins Manufacturing and Celotex exhibited strength and improvement was retained by common stocks of Lion Oil, Texas Corporation, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Douglas Aircraft, J. I. Case, Revere Copper, Great Northern, Westinghouse, Dow Chemical, J. C. Penney, Allied Chemical and Johns-Manville.

On the offside were General Motors, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, International Nickel, Southern Railway, Western Union, American Can, Du Pont and Montgomery Ward.

Curb gainers included Aluminum of America, America Light & Traction, International Petroleum, Lake Shore and Humble Oil. On the losing side were American Gas, Aviation & Transportation, Electric Bond & Share and Pentepec. The turnover here was around 86,000 shares versus 89,000 in the previous full session.

Quiet buying bolstered the rail division of the bond market and a number of speculative industrials and utilities followed the upturn. Gains generally were limited to fractions, but with the benefit of some jumps of 2 points or more, the Associated Press rail index pushed up .4 of a point.

U. S. Governments turned irregular after early gains. In the Stock Exchange some of the Treasuries closed around ⅝ of a point higher, but in over-the-counter market the late trend was downward to a final range of narrow changes either way.

Government traders said buying interest in the Treasuries thinned out after some early interest, and it was predicted the market would continue a slow affair until the Treasury disclosed more details of the proposed $1,000,000,000 financing program, involving $500,000,000 of new money and refunding of an equal amount of securities maturing June 15.

Rail Expansion Orders to Run Into Millions

By the United Press

New York, March 17.—The Nation's railroads have placed new orders in an expansion program, linked to national defense, expected to run into millions of dollars, trade quarters revealed today.

The Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railroad has ordered 700 steel, wood-sheathed box cars from American Car & Foundry Co. A. C. F. also has a Lehigh & New England Railroad order for 100 covered hopper cars. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad has bought 175 ore cars from Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Co.

Locomotive orders placed in the last few days included three 380-horsepower Diesel-Electrics bought by the Boston & Maine from General Electric Co. and a similar engine purchased by St. Paul Union Depot. General Electric also has received orders for several small Diesels from the United States Government in addition to purchases already made.

Reports in the trade indicated Delaware & Hudson would be in the market for upward of 500 freight cars, and Canadian Pacific for 250 hopper cars.

Cotton Futures

New York, March 17 (AP).—Cotton futures broke 19 to 29 points today in the wake of reports President Roosevelt had opposed high loans on raw cotton, price fixing and increased parity payments as an immediate means to raise farm income.

For days the market has ridden the crest of a buying wave which lifted prices to the highest of the season.

Mill buying, recently one of the chief props, was withdrawn and other purchasers sat back and waited for fresh news from Washington.

Bombay selling was especially noticeable, most of the offerings coming near the start of trade.

Worth Street textile dealers reported the upward price tendency appeared to be continuing, but some confusion existed regarding current levels. Turnover was restricted as mills kept an eye on the Washington scene.

Mexican Group Negotiates Rayon Deal With Japan

Mexico City, March 17 (AP).—The Mexican rayon control agency is negotiating for purchase of about 6,500,000 pounds of rayon from Japan, but informed quarters said today that the deal is still in the discussion stage.

They emphasized that it involves no intergovernment agreement, but only a commercial contract. Mexico is turning to Japan for rayon because the European war has terminated a barter deal with Italy.

Mexican sources said American rayon cost more than the Japanese product.

Listen! with Glynn

Since script number one was written in 1928, financial markets have crashed, kings have been deposed, wars have raged, nations have disappeared, in fact the world has been turned upside-down.

But the more things change the more it remains the same, about as permanent a fixture in America's daily life as you can think of offhand.

Which is a sort of roundabout way of noting that tomorrow a certain radio program celebrates its thirteenth continuous year on the air. And, in case you haven't guessed offhand, the name of that program is "Amos 'n' Andy."

In their three years and ten, Amos and Andy, or Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll, have written and broadcast some 3,500 episodes in the lives of the fabulous characters from radio's mythical Harlem. In that time they have created about 500 voice characters, the best known of which, as if you didn't know, are the Kingfish, Brother Crawford, Van Porter and Lightnin'.

Their airy adventures probably add up to being the longest continuous story of all time and the run of their popularity makes even the records of "Able's Irish Rose" and "Tobacco Road" seem slight by comparison.

So, after chalking up this something of a record, how do you suppose "Amos 'n' Andy" plan to celebrate the momentous birthday? Well, they're going to get a good night's sleep and then start to work on script number 3,501. The boys are getting used to those big numbers in the corner of the script.

Contract Bridge

A formidable family bridge team is Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Maier "Jimmy" is a member of the Four Aces, and his young wife, while rarely playing in tournaments, has had ample opportunity to study his technique as his constant and most ardent kibitzer.

Today's hand, however, taken from a rubber match, shows not the male member of the Maier family but strangly, the gentle Mrs. Maier taking charge, bidding and playing with boldness and authority.

It was she who directed the contract to three no trump after a bluff club call, and it was she who played the precarious bid through to safety, utilizing every scrap of information the play of the opponents afforded.

When West, with six cards in clubs, knowing well that the suit is used as a carry-all for every sort of holding, opened the club six, the use of Mrs. Maier's first bid seemed to have failed of its purpose.

A low club was played from dummy, and East won with the king. East made the natural return of the diamond queen up to weakness in the dummy. Failure to return a club was highly significant and declarer read it correctly: East had no more. The diamond queen held, but the second diamond trick was won with the ace. The ace of spades was played, and a heart led. East followed low and the king in the closed hand won.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT.	Pass	3 NT.	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 6 ♣.

Deciding that had West held the ace he would have taker it, Mrs. Maier led her last club to the ace in dummy, then played another heart toward her hand. East ducked, the queen won, and another heart lead felled ace and jack together.

East returned a diamond, won by the king; then on the last heart East had to discard. When a diamond was thrown off, Mrs. Maier put East in the lead with that suit, forcing him to exit with a spade and let her take a finesse against the queen. She made three no trump losing a club, a heart and two diamonds.
